INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

THE period of fifty years, over which the present volume extends, may be divided into two portions, the first embracing the reigns of Robert I. and Edward II., which nearly coincide; the second, those of David II., from 1329 till his return from captivity in 1357, and of Edward III., from 1327, for the first thirty years of his long tenure of the throne. 1307–57. Edw. II., III. (Robert I. David II.)

Besides the Chronicon de Lanercost, the Gesta Annalia of Fordun, and works of that class, there are two other authorities of the highest value for the period embraced in this volume. These are the Scala Cronica of Sir Thomas Gray of Heton,[1] and the Metrical History of the Brus, by Archdeacon John Barbour.[2] The statements in both of these have been tested by many entries in this volume, the bearing of which attentive readers will not fail to discover for themselves. Barbour abounds in graphic pictures of his hero's career, and of those who served with or against the King of Scots. In these details he is almost always correct, with occasional errors in names. Writing as he did at a long interval of time, about half a century after King Robert's death, the arrangement of his story is often imperfect, the succession of events transposed, and wrong dates given, capable, however, of being corrected by other authority, and detracting little from the real historical value of The Brus. On the other hand, Sir Thomas Gray, who compiled or at least began his chronicle while a prisoner in Edinburgh castle about 1355, was an actor in many of the events which he describes during the reign of Edward III. And for those of the two preceding reigns he had the authority of his father, also Sir Thomas Gray, who served with distinction in Scotland under the three Edwards, on several occasions narrowly escaping with his life, and being made prisoner at Bannockburn.[1] The Scala Cronica is more correct in the order of its dates and events than The Brus, and, though not free from minor errors in names, is corroborated by the records in this volume. Its great value consists in its being 'the produc-'tion of an observant and educated secular,' contrasted with 'the 'other historical memorials of the same age, written by men 'who, in the language of that period, were styled Religious.'[2] It is written in a curious version of Norman-French, and though Leland's extracts, by which it is commonly known, are quaint and pithy, they do not always give the full import of the original. Unfortunately also, since Leland made his extracts, a large part of the original MS. has been lost, as Mr Stevenson pointed out. These missing membranes contain the chronicle from the capture of Roxburgh castle by the Scots, on 30th March 1342, to the surprise of Berwick by the Earls of March and Angus in 1355, —thirteen years. For this period we have nothing more than Leland's abstract to rely on. Two publications of the Rolls' series, Historical Papers and Letters from the Northern Registers (Rev. J. Raine), 1873, and Registrum Palatinum Dunelmense, or Bishop Kellawe's register (Sir T. D. Hardy), 1873–4, are also of much value to those studying the Scottish invasions of the northern counties during the reign of Robert I.

Our last volume closed at a date most opportune for the independence of Scotland, the death of Edward I. at Burgh-on-sands, in sight of the shore where his foot was not again to tread. Had his life been prolonged, there would have been much blood shed in Scotland; and if the King of Scots had fallen into his hands, the struggle might have ended in submission for a time, till another hero of the type of Wallace or Bruce arose to lead his countrymen to victory.

Edward II., a man of another mould from his resolute father, now ascended the English throne at the age of twenty-three,

[1] Of which battle his son gives a most interesting account, from an English point of view, differing from the usual one in some important respects.

[2] Scala Cronica, pref., p. iv.

ill-fitted by character and inexperience to cope with the King of Scots, as events soon were to prove. After accompanying his father's body for several days southwards,[1] when its farther escort was committed to the Archbishop of York,[2] Edward II., retracing his steps, left Carlisle at the end of July, with the forces destined by his father for the recovery of Scotland. Proceeding up the valley of the Nith, he reached the little town of Cumnock about the second week of August.[3] Near this stood a castle of the Earl of March, where he most likely took up his quarters, and remained till the 25th of that month, when he set out on his return to England.[4] 'By which inglorious retreat, after 'such mighty preparations for a decisive campaign, he rendered 'Bruce and his adherents more bold, and disheartened all in Scot-'land who favoured the English cause.' So says Lord Hailes.[5]

1307. Edward II. (Robert I.)

So soon as Edward had retreated to England, the King of Scots, issuing from his fastnesses, probably the hill country between Carrick and Kirkcudbright, around Glentrool, where he had sheltered himself before from the late King of England's pursuit, carried fire and sword through inner Galloway.

It may be presumed that one object in this foray was the punishment of the Macdowals, by whose chief his two brothers had been led to die on the gallows of Carlisle in the spring, at the late King's command. The date of this raid is nearly fixed by the writ of Edward II. from Clipstone on the 25th of September,[6] allowing the Galloway men to feed their flocks and herds in Inglewood forest, whither they had fled before Bruce. A few days later,[7] he commanded the Earl of Richmond, who had been appointed warden of Scotland in room of Aymar de Valence,[8] to march to Galloway and put down Bruce.

Bruce, however, seems to have held his ground there, levying

[5] The Annals of Scotland, by Sir David Dalrymple (Lord Hailes), still form the best guide to those who study its mediæval history. Under all the disadvantages attending imperfect access to the records and chronicles in his day, Lord Hailes's rare sagacity seldom fails him in coming to a just conclusion on the events of the times of which he treated; and, where the evidence of original documents was not available, his judicial mind guided him in most cases to a right conclusion. The editor has been at all stages of his work much indebted to the labours of this eminent man.

tribute from the people.[1] His march to Aberdeenshire, later in the same year, noticed by Fordun, in which he encountered the Earl of Buchan about Christmas, at the Slevach, was a skilful operation of war. Bruce must have remained during that winter and spring in the neighbourhood of Buchan's territories, or somewhere in the central parts of the country. Fordun relates that they met in battle at Inverury, in 1308—it is said on Ascension day (22nd May),—when Buchan's army was routed, and the victor committed the devastations in his earldom which Barbour graphically calls 'the Herschip of Bowchane.'[2] This earl died during the following autumn, for on the 3rd of December the ward of his lands was given by Edward II. to Ralph de Monthermer.[3]

Whatever the precise order or date of these events may have been, Robert Bruce must have been fully occupied in the northern and central parts of Scotland, with the assistance of his allies Alexander and Simon Fraser, during the winter and spring of 1307–8, in holding his own against the English. Barbour says that all those 'benorth the Month' came to his peace,[4] a work that could not be done in a day. There is also a memorandum on the affairs of Scotland, undated, but assignable to the month of June[5] 1308, in which it appears that Alexander Abernethy, Edmund Hastings, and John fitz Marmaduke were in command for England between the Forth and Orkney, with 120 men-at-arms among them. The two newly appointed guardians[6] were to take truce from the King of Scots, as from themselves, not in Edward's name, and evidently he seems to have been in a position to stand out for terms.

During this year it is probable that Edward Bruce performed

The late Lord Saltoun has two interesting papers on this expedition of the King of Scots to the north, which he shows to have been a very important piece of strategy, and not a flight as Lord Hailes was disposed to think (The Frasers of Philorth, vols. i. pp. 62-3, ii. pp. 183–94). He believes that the battle of Inverury was fought on Christmas eve 1307, and his reasons are not without weight. But if it be the fact, as stated by Barbour, that Sir David of Brechin, who fought against Bruce there, came to terms soon after, and surrendered his castle of Brechin, where David earl of Athol had besieged him on behalf of Bruce (as Barbour also relates), then the battle must have occurred during the year 1308, as related by Fordun. For on 20th May 1308, Edward II. thanks David earl of Athol, David of Brechin, and other Scotsmen, for their faithful service, which clearly shows that they were of his party long after Christmas preceding.

the exploits narrated by Barbour,[1] in subduing Galloway, and expelling the English garrisons, with the Macdowals, especially obnoxious to the house of Bruce. Before the 1st of April 1309,[2] Sir Dugal, their head, had been driven into England, where for thirty years he and his family were obliged to remain to escape the vengeance of the Bruces. Some indeed seem to have been killed in Scotland.[3] Shortly before this time, Thomas Randolf, the nephew and future right-hand man of Robert Bruce, had been captured, along with Alexander Steward of Bonkill, by Sir James Douglas, on Lyne water, in upper Tweeddale, in the company of Adam Gordon, who escaped. Barbour, who describes the affair,[4] says Randolf spoke disrespectfully to his uncle, who put him in durance till he came to his allegiance. He must soon have done so, as on 4th March 1308–9, Edward II. gave his forfeited manor of Stichill (in Roxburgh) to Adam Gordon, his late comrade.[5] Adam remained a staunch adherent of England till shortly before Bannockburn. So did Alexander Steward, who may therefore have soon escaped from his cousin Douglas.[6] So little did family ties govern the political course of the great men of Scotland at that time.

Edward II. (Robert I.)

The next military operation of the King of Scots was an important one—to retaliate on his inveterate foe, John of Argyll or Lorne, the hardships which that chief had caused him to endure in his disastrous retreat through his country after the rout of Methven, and to break the power of so distinguished an ally of England. The precise date of this expedition is a matter of some uncertainty, unfortunately not cleared up by the very interesting letter directly referring to it, from John of Lorne to Edward II.[7] This letter was evidently written in reply to one from the English King received on '11th March,' and probably very soon after its receipt, but no year is given. Nor has any letter from Edward been observed which might correspond to the date of receipt. The only dates at which Bruce was likely to have attacked Lorne are late in 1308 or early in 1309, for by 16th June of the latter year, both Alexander of Argyll and his son John were in council with Edward at Westminster.[1] Neither of them appears to have ever returned to Scotland. Alexander died in Ireland, about December 1310,[2] John seven years later. Bruce's attack could not have been made very early in 1308, for he was engaged, as we have seen, more to the north-east with Buchan and other enemies beyond the 'Mounth,' i.e., the Grampians. A possible explanation of the difficulty is that the attack and defeat of Lorne's men at the pass of Awe, and the subsequent siege and capture of Dunstaffnage castle, whither Lorne betook himself, narrated by Barbour[3] as occurring closely after each other, may have occupied a much longer period, and have been separated by an interval of some months. The terms of Lorne's letter tend in this direction, and it is possible that his father, then advanced in years, after the battle of Awe, which Fordun says took place between the 15th and the 23rd of August,[4] may have thought submission to Bruce expedient, while the son still held out in one of his castles. If the record of Robert Bruce's parliament at St Andrews on 16th March in his third year (1308–9[5]) is correct, Alexander of Argyll was present there as his liegeman, while his son was holding communication with England. There was ample time for Dunstaffnage to be besieged and to fall between 11th March 1308–9 and 16th June, by which latter date, as shown, both father and son were in England. On the above supposition, coupled with the records in this volume, the narratives of Barbour and Fordun, which Lord Hailes seems to think contradictory, are reconcilable. Barbour is right in saying that Alexander of Argyll submitted to Bruce [for a time,] and that his son John retreated to his ships,—Fordun equally so in saying that Alexander, refusing homage, retired into England. All depends on the time to which each writer referred. John of Argyll's letter represents the attack on his territory by the King of Scots in a somewhat different light from Barbour's account. There are no means of verifying the numbers there given, but it seems unlikely that Bruce, with such an overwhelming force as 10,000 or 15,000 men, should ask a truce from Lorne with only 800. The Lord of Lorne, on his own showing, with three castles and an inland sea (Lochawe, probably) to guard, besides uncertain neighbours,[1] would seem more in need of truce than his assailant. However, the letter is explicit, and an inferior force, well acquainted with its own mountainous district, full of narrow defiles, might, and probably did, place the invaders at considerable disadvantage, till foiled by the genius of Bruce. 1309-10. Edward II. (Robert I.)

There is another circumstance in favour of the view that Lorne was not finally overcome till the beginning of 1309. Sir Patrick Graham, whom he calls his son-'in-law,' was a prisoner in the Tower on 4th December 1308.[2] And though his imprisonment was mitigated, he seems still to have been in durance at the close of the year, when his father-in-law begs his freedom to serve 'against the King's enemies,' who could be no other than the partisans of Bruce.[3] John of Lorne, though expelled from Scotland, was still to fight for eight years against Bruce and end his life in the service of Edward II.[4]

After some negotiations at the instance of the King of France in 1309, which proved futile, Edward II., in the autumn of 1310, led an army into Scotland by a route described as exceedingly hazardous if there had been any enemies to oppose him.[5] A wardrobe account[6] shows his line of march to have been from Roxburgh on 21st September, by Traquair, Kirkurd, Biggar, Lanark, to Cambusnethan on the Clyde, where he was on the 8th of October. Writs are tested at Renfrew on the 15th October, and, turning back, he reached Linlithgow on the 23rd, where, after remaining at least five days, he returned to Berwick, staying there all winter.

During this invasion, the King of Scots was reported by the English spies to be with his forces on a moor near Stirling, doubtless in observation of the English movements.[1] From an anonymous letter in February following,[2] probably written by the English chancellor, relating news from Scotland, it appears that a meeting had taken place between Edward's envoys and Bruce at Selkirk a few days before Christmas, and that a farther interview, to take place near Melrose, between him and the Earls of Gloucester and Cornwall, had been broken off, as Bruce had been warned of treachery. Various letters in the same handwriting[3] reveal the dissensions between the English King and his nobility, who were much more anxious to get rid of Gaveston than to crush the Scots. An original bond of maintenance by Guy earl of Warwick (whom Gaveston nick-named 'the black dog of Arden') to the Earl of Hereford, Edward's brother-in-law, shows the hatred inspired by this upstart, soon to culminate in his fall and death.[4]

The King of Scots, well informed of these quarrels, took the opportunity of ravaging the north of England. On 12th August 1311 he crossed the March at Solway, burned all Gilsland, Haltwistle, and great part of Tynedale for eight days.[5] Next month (8th September) he crossed the East March, and wasted Redesdale round to Corbridge, remaining fifteen days. The Northumbrians paid £2000 for a truce till Candlemas. It would be tedious to go into details regarding these Scottish raids into the northern counties. It is enough to say that they were incessant, The chronicler of Lanercost uses the expression 'more solito' in speaking of Bruce's raid of Midsummer 1313. The same unfriendly pen[6] remarks on the singular divisions among the Scots. That the father was found on their side, the son on that of England; one brother a Scotsman, another English; nay even, the same person now with one country, now with the other. In fact, he says, the greater part were English, probably to save their lands there, for their hearts, though not their bodies, were with their property. Such is the substance of his account. And it must be admitted that there is much truth in it. A large number of his own countrymen were long hostile to the King of Scots. Names generally associated with the patriotic cause, e.g., Baillie, Cathcart, Craigie, Gordon, Graham, Kirkpatrick, Maxwell, Napier, Ramsay, Seton, St Clair, Steward of Bonkill, Torthorald, and others equally well known, are found for years after the death of Edward I. ranged under the banner of England.[1] 1313. Edward II. (Robert I.)

The fiery ordeal of Bannockburn recalled many to the cause of their country ; but even after that great victory there were for many years not a few English partisans among the great men of Scotland. Whatever the reason may have been, the fact is beyond question.

It was fortunate for the rising nationality that the incompetent hands of Edward II. held the sceptre of England, paralysed and thwarted as he was, besides, by the great nobles, more eager to destroy his favourite than to recover Scotland.

Notwithstanding the internal opposition of many of his own countrymen, the fortunes of Robert Bruce continued to improve, and conversely the state of the Scottish adherents of England became insupportable. They deputed Patrick earl of March, and Adam Gordon, in the end of 1313, to represent their distresses to Edward, and ask succour. The original petition[2] gives details, not only of Bruce's exactions, but of their ill-treatment by the English garrisons of Berwick and Roxburgh. It appears that the Earl was an especial sufferer, and also that Adam Gordon, hitherto a trusted adherent of England, had been roughly treated by the constable of Roxburgh castle, who suspected him of hostility,[3] perhaps with good reason, as it was captured soon after, and Gordon joined his countrymen about that time.

We are enabled now to fix, with more certainty than the narratives of Barbour and Lord Hailes do, the precise dates when the chief fortresses of Scotland fell into the hands of its king. Perth was apparently the first place taken, on 8th January 1312–13.[1] The governor, Sir William Oliphant, and a large part of his garrison were Scotsmen.[2] The Chronicle of Lanercost gives the date as Monday in the octaves of Epiphany[3] 1312–13, and says it was surprised at night, that Bruce killed the better Scottish burgesses, but let the English go free, and sent the governor bound to prison in the Isles. This is not likely, for Oliphant, who was most probably the same man who gallantly defended Stirling in 1304 against Edward I., was in England by the 10th of March following,[4] and had a safe conduct to go to Scotland and return on 21st October the same year.[5]

Dumfries was the next to fall, on 7th February 1312–13, which very exact date is noted by the English receiver of stores at Carlisle on the margin of his compotus.[6] The constable was Sir Dugal Macdowal, who surrendered it to his foe the King of Scots in person, probably from famine, as he had made repeated complaints of want of supplies.[7]

The Balliols' castle of Buittle, and the Comyns' of Dalswynton, with Lochmaben, and the historic Carlaverock, were probably taken about the same time.[8]

The pele of Linlithgow, the capture of which Barbour describes as having taken place shortly after Bruce's expedition to Lorne in 1308,[9] was certainly in English hands in July 1312,[10] probably still later, in May and August 1313.[11] Sir Archibald Livingston was in command, with garrisons of Scots and English, there and in his own pele of Livingston, under the orders of Sir Peter Lubaud, the warden and sheriff of Edinburgh. The editor has found no evidence of Barbour's very curious account of the stratagem by which that 'stout carle and sture,' William Bunnock, took Linlithgow, either in the Chronicle of Lanercost or elsewhere; but both of these peles probably were taken shortly before the castle of Edinburgh.

William de Felyng or Filling, a Gascon knight,[1] was next taken by escalade by Sir James Douglas, not in February 1312–13,[2] but a year later, in capite jejunii [28th February] 1313–14.[3] Part of Barbour's interesting account of the surprise, viz., that the governor defended the keep for another day, till mortally wounded by an arrow, is attested by Sir Thomas Gray. Ivo de Aldeburgh, well known in the wars of the time, was commandant of the town,[4] and there were some Scotsmen in the garrison.[5] Our calendar shows that it fell between 4th February and May.[6] 1313–14. Edward II. (Robert I.)

Encouraged by the news of this success, Randolph, who was then blockading Edinburgh castle, took it, also by surprise, one evening during the same Lent.[7] Whether Barbour's story, that a former inhabitant of the castle, whom he calls William Francuss or Fransoys, revealed to Randolph a secret path up the crags on the north side, be correct or not, it is not controverted by the detailed account in the Chronicle of Lanercost.[8] The Franciscan says the Scots attacked the south port in vespere, being the only practicable point.[9] The garrison hurried to this place, and, while their attention was thus occupied, another band of assailants climbed the north side of the rock to the foot of the wall, placed their ladders, and forcing their way in, opened the gates to their friends outside, and, it is added, killed all the English. Whether this be true or not, there were here many Scotsmen in garrison,[10] two of them bearing the surname of Douglas.

Dundee, which was under command of Sir Alexander Abernethy, with a large garrison, mostly Scotsmen, in the end of 1312,[11] was probably taken in 1313 or early in 1314, by Edward Bruce, who also took the castle of Rutherglen, or pele as it is called by Barbour, who is the only authority for the date.[12]

Such are the ascertained facts regarding the capture of these important places, the only fortresses then remaining in English hands being those of Berwick-on-Tweed, Stirling, and Bothwell. Bothwell was commanded by Walter fitz Gilbert for its owner, Aymar de Valence, and, as we know, he held it till after the day of Bannockburn, when he made terms with the victor, and, receiving substantial rewards for his timely change of sides, became the founder of an illustrious Scottish family. His garrison of sixty men were entirely Scotsmen.[1]

Stirling eastle was besieged by Edward Bruce from Lent till Midsummer 1313.[2] Its garrison included many Scotsmen.[3] The conditions under which it was to be surrendered by the warden, Sir Philip Moubray, if not relieved before Midsummer 1314, brought about the great day of Bannockburn. Many references will be found[4] to the heavy loss sustained by the English chivalry and the large ransoms paid for those who survived as prisoners.[5]

Lord Hailes has raised a question regarding the received numbers of the English army, on which, with all deference to his great authority, there appears to the editor some doubt. He takes Hume to task for saying 'that the army of Edward, 'which, according to the Scots writers, amounted to 100,000 'men, was probably much inferior to that number.' Hume founded on the writs enrolled in the Fœdera, addressed to the sheriffs of twelve English counties, two earls, and five barons, for the foot, who numbered in all 21,540. This is undoubtedly good authority, for, as a rule, these writs were always enrolled, and the Patent Rolls of the time are not defective. Contingents from all the English shires were not invariably summoned. In the writs in question the men of the northern and midland counties, which incurred most danger from the Scots, were summoned. The Irish contingent summoned by Edward I. in 1304 did not exceed 3000.[6] And the whole of Wales, when summoned to the siege of Berwick in 1319, only contributed 2400 men.[1] The foreigners, Gascons, and others, can hardly be estimated at more than a few thousands, and after allowing 10,000 light horsemen and 3000 heavy cavalry,[2] the whole English army probably did not exceed 50,000, still a very large force. For the Scottish army there are absolutely no data. But in so poor and thinly populated a country, devastated by long war, 15,000 or 16,000 would be a fair estimate of the comrades of Bruce. The Scots, twenty years later, could raise no more for the almost equally important object of relieving Berwick. The 'pitaille' or rascalry, who followed these mediæval armies, must have largely exceeded the actual fighting men enrolled.

According to Sir Thomas Gray, the body of men-at-arms under Clifford and Beaumont, who encountered Randolph, numbered 300, not 800, as Barbour says. His account is exceedingly interesting, and shows how they were defeated through the over-confidence of their commanders in giving Randolph's men time to form on open ground, after emerging from the wood where they were posted.

Edward II. (Robert I.)

Whether correct or not, the above comparative estimate preserves the relative proportions between the armies, and in no way detracts from the glory of the victory.

It is not surprising that, after this crushing defeat, the Scottish raids on the Border were renewed. The Chronicle of Lanercost[3] mentions one by Edward Bruce and James Douglas on the Eastern March, about 1st August, when they penetrated to Richmond and returned by Appleby with great plunder. A letter to the King of England, despatched by Sir Andrew Harcla from Carlisle on 12th July,[4] reports that an attack by the Scots was supposed there to be imminent, and complains that the succours promised him from York had not reached him. He was at this time sheriff of Cumberland, and afterwards rose to higher distinction, from which he suddenly fell. The name is territorial, taken from a manor of Harcla on the March,[5] and the family was of ordinary rank as local gentry. Sir Andrew's first occurrence in these records is in 1310,[6] when he, then a knight, and his brother John were serving with Sir John Segrave. From this date he was a prominent man on the West Marches. Sir Thomas Gray speaks of the renown of his 'beaux faites d'armes' on the Scots,[7] and attributes his fall, when Earl of Carlisle, to pride,—the cause often assigned. Barbour also names him among the warriors of the Border, when telling how Sir John Soulis of Eskedale, with only 50 men, captured Sir Andrew with 300, 'horsyt jolyly.'[1] Sir Andrew himself, petitioning the King for aid in his ransom from prison in Scotland, says his vallet will relate how he was taken;[2] which farther stimulates, without gratifying, curiosity. Just before this misfortune, he had performed a gallant exploit calculated to raise the spirits of the English,—the defence of Carlisle against the King of Scots in person, who, after an eleven days' siege[3] (from 22nd July to 1st August 1315), was obliged to retire with considerable loss. The Franciscan[4] gives an account of this siege, showing intimate local knowledge of the city. He says a false attack was made on the east side, opposite the place of the friars minors, but the real assault was intended on the west side of the city, opposite the canons' place and the friars preachers,[5] where James of Douglas, 'miles baldus et cautelosus,' was watching his opportunity to place his ladders. But all attacks were foiled by the valour of Sir Andrew and the garrison, and the Scots, abandoning their siege engines, decamped with great haste, pursued by the defenders, who made some prisoners of note. Among these, the monk says with much satisfaction, were John Moray, who had for his own share of prisoners at Bannockburn twenty-three English knights, besides squires and smaller people, getting ransoms for them all, and Robert Bard, a man 'of the worst disposition to Englishmen.' They were taken by Sir Andrew himself to Edward II. at Clipstone,[6] and held to heavy ransom, their captor receiving a 'geredoun' of 1000 marks from the King,[7] which, however, he soon had to apply towards his own release.[8] Reserving farther notices of this gallant and unfortunate man to their order of date, an exploit somewhat earlier than this may be remarked,—the recapture of the isle of Man by the English shortly before February 1314–15.[1] It had been taken from them by Robert Bruce about 11th June 1313.[2] John of Lorne was its re-captor, whose career, after the King of Scots drove him from his Argyleshire territory, has been strangely misrepresented by Barbour,[3] who asserts that he was made prisoner by Bruce during his expedition to the Western Islands,[4] put in prison at Dunbarton, and afterwards in Lochleven, where he died. Whereas it is clear from this volume that, from the time of his expulsion from Scotland, Lorne was continuously for eight or nine years in Edward's service as admiral of the western seas, mustering fleets for expeditions to Scotland, Man, &c., and died, probably in London, about the end of the year 1317, a pensioner of England.[5]

1315. Edward II. (Robert I.)

Before the King of Scots besieged Carlisle, his brother Edward had sailed on his expedition to gain the crown of Ireland, landing at Carrickfergus on 25th May 1315.[6] Barbour[7] gives a long account of this cruel and bloody war, which, though it divided the forces and multiplied the perplexities of the English, had no permanent effects, ending with the battle near Dundalk on 5th October 1318, when the titular King of Ireland was killed, and his Scottish and Irish forces annihilated.

The King of Scots joined his brother in Ireland with reinforcements in autumn 1316, remaining till the following May. During this time the brothers led their forces as far south as Limerick. Many of their men died from hunger, and this profitless foray is only relieved by the incident related by Barbour of the great King Robert halting his army in a position exposed to some risk of attack from the superior force of the English Deputy, rather than desert a poor woman who had been taken in the pains of childbirth.[8]

This Irish expedition does not receive much notice in these extracts. One letter,[9] giving an account of the battle at Arscoll near Kildare (26th January 1315–16), settles a point on which Lord Hailes was doubtful, from the Irish Annals (Camden) contradicting themselves. He therefore placed the victory gained at Kenlis in Meath by the Scots, over Roger Mortimer, at a later date than Butler the justiciar's defeat at Arscoll. The letter shows that Mortimer had left Ireland before it was written, and Kenlis must, therefore, have been fought in 1315, for Mortimer did not return as Deputy till 1317.

While the King of Scots and his brother were in Ireland, the English commanders on the Border were not idle, and made some expeditions into Scotland, all of which were defeated by the skill and energy of Sir James Douglas, who had been left as lieutenant along with Walter the Steward. These are described in the main with substantial accuracy by Barbour.[1] But the recorded facts of one are even more interesting,—the raid made from Berwick into Teviotdale, in which 'Edmound de Cailow,' whom he calls a Gascon knight and governor of Berwick, was slain. With remarkable carelessness Edward II. seems to have allowed the town of Berwick, of which Sir Maurice Berkeley was the warden, to be short of supplies. Urgent letters from Sir Maurice, the chamberlain, and the mayor[2] pressed on the King its imminent danger and need of help. In those of the chamberlain and mayor they relate that on 14th February 1315–16 a number of the men-at-arms, against the warden's orders, and without any leader, made a foray to within two leagues of Melrose. On their return with many prisoners and cattle, they were surprised at a ford[3] eight leagues from Berwick by James Douglas, William Soulis, and Henry Balliol, losing all their booty and eighty of their number killed and prisoners. Among the slain were Arnaut Poillant, Piers Logar, Remond Caillau, and other Gascons. It is a remarkable confirmation of Barbour, whose only mistake was in Caillau's Christian name, and styling him governor of Berwick; his rank being that of king's sergeant-at-arms.

defeated a detachment of the earl of Arundel's force, and Thomas of Richmond its commander was slain, is not recorded here with equal fulness.[1] We know it chiefly from Barbour and the Scala Cronica. The slain commander was not, as Lord Hailes appears to think (following Barbour, who calls him an earl), one of the family of Brittany. He was a well-known man on the Border, owner of Burton-Constable in Yorkshire, was at the siege of Carlaverock in 1300, constable of Norham in 1310[2] under Antony Bek, and warden of Cockermouth in 1314.[3]

Edward II. (Robert I.)

Another of these chivalrous fights, that in which Sir Robert Neville, the 'Peacock of the north,' was slain by Douglas near Berwick, is illustrated by a petition,[4] where it appears that not only his brother Ralph, but two others, Sir Alexander and John Neville, were also made prisoners.[5] No reference is made to the invasion of Fife about the same time, and the valiant conduct of William St Clair bishop of Dunkeld.

The surprise and capture of the town of Berwick, through the treachery of a citizen, on 28th March 1318, was the next exploit of the King of Scots. The Earl of March, who two years before had joined the Scottish side, appears to have been concerned in the affair.[6] Barbour says that the castle surrendered in six days after the town was taken.[7] Lord Hailes inclines to this view, and thinks the author of Scala Cronica made an incredible statement in saying that the castle held out for eleven weeks, and only surrendered for lack of victual and rescue.[8] But Sir Thomas Gray is right, and the castle must have been stoutly defended by Sir Roger Horsley the warden, who lost an eye. He capitulated about 20th July, sixteen weeks after the town was taken, and evidently brought off his garrison.[9] One of them performed a gallant exploit during the siege, taking twenty-one of the horses across the Tweed, and letters to the King.[10] Edward was much enraged at the loss of Berwick, though he had done little to rescue it, and ordered severe measures against the mayor and burgesses, seizing their goods, and putting some of themselves in prison.[1] It appears that they had undertaken the defence of the town, and there were, as Barbour says, dissensions between them and the garrison of the castle,[2] which probably led to its surprise. He resolved to attempt to regain it, and summoned his forces to Newcastle-on-Tyne on 24th July 1319. Barbour's narrative of the siege[3] is valuable from the many 'characteristical circumstances which it contains.'[4] The activity of Walter the Steward and his garrison, the skill of John Crabbe[5] the Flemish engineer, and other incidents, are related with great vigour. In a muster roll or pay sheet of Edward's army around Berwick we have the means of testing its numbers,[6] which have been, as is often the case, incorrectly stated. Besides such force as may have been on board the besieging fleet, of which there is no record, the numbers are fully 7000 foot and 1000 hobelars or light horse. There may have been some heavy cavalry supplied as usual by the great military tenants, not of much use, of course, in the actual siege operations. As appears in Fœdera,[7] the earl of Lancaster, with 2000 men, was also summoned, but there is no evidence on this roll that he or they were present. Walsingham, who was not contemporary, seems the only authority for his presence, and if his men had been there they would have been found on the roll.

The King of Scots, seeing the improbability of attacking with success the English camp, despatched Douglas and Randolph with 15,000 men[8] to create a diversion in favour of the besieged. This force routed the hastily assembled levies of the Archbishop of York at Myton-on-Swale, with much slaughter, on 20th September. That the besieging army broke up on hearing this news is undoubted, for their last pay was issued on the 24th of that month.[1] The King of England was now obliged to consent to a truce for two years, which was granted by the King of Scots under his seal at Berwick on 22nd December 1319.[2] It contained a clause especially galling to Edward, that Herbottel eastle should be delivered to the Scots or dismantled; for he ordered it to be done as secretly as possible in January following,[3] though it appears not to have been done by August 1321.[4] 1319-20. Edward II. (Robert I.)

About this time, at the parliament of Scotland held at Arbroath on 6th April 1320,[5] the celebrated letter from the barons, freeholders, and community, maintaining the independence of their country, was despatched to the Pope. Later in the same year, the mysterious conspiracy against Robert Bruce was betrayed by a lady, whom Barbour[6] does not name, though Fordun does, calling her the Countess of Stratherne. Which of the countesses of Stratherne she was has been much discussed among writers of eminence. The editor will here point out an account of the business given by Sir Thomas Gray,[7] and hitherto, he thinks, little, if at all, noticed, which indicates a different person. He says the conspiracy of Soulis, Breghyn, and others was revealed by Muryogh de Menteth, afterwards earl, who had long dwelt in England, and became earl of Menteth by 'reles' of his niece, the daughter of his elder brother, who after her father's death was countess.[8] There are some points here worth consideration. Sir Thomas Gray senior may have known this Muryogh of Menteth, who was in the English interest about this period, or shortly before—from 1310 to 1317.[9] At the former date he was the 'vallet' of Sir William Ferrars of Groby, and seems to have been related to Sir William. For on the latter date, as 'Sir Murdac de Menteth,' he is called in succession to the manor of Groby on the death of Sir William Ferrars and Elena his wife without heirs of their bodies. At what time he rejoined his countrymen is not known, but he is said to have fallen at Dupplin as earl of Menteth in 1332.[1] Sir Thomas Gray's version of the betrayal of the conspiracy is certainly different from the usually received one.

Connected possibly with this conspiracy, said to have for its object the placing of William de Soulis on the throne, there are two documents of interest. The dead body of Roger de Moubray, who was implicated, was sentenced as that of a traitor. Now there is a pardon by Edward II.[2] to Alexander Moubray and twenty-nine other Scotsmen, his followers or servants, who had come to England before 18th February 1320–21, it may be in consequence of this business. Sir Ingelram de Umfraville, who left Scotland about the same time as Moubray, was restored to his possessions in England, on the ground that he had convinced the King that he had escaped from prison in Scotland, and had never left his allegiance.[3] If so, he had been a prisoner since Bannockburn,[4] where he had been reported among the slain, while, according to Barbour (when relating the sad fate of Sir David of Brechin, Sir Ingelram's friend), he had become a liegeman of Bruce, but renounced it after his friend's execution, King Robert allowing him to return to England.[5]

Nothing more appears in the records than we already possess in Fœdera,[6] of the negotiations between Douglas and Randolph, and Thomas earl of Lancaster and his adherents, which ended with the defeat of Lancaster at Boroughbridge by Sir Andrew Harcla on 16th March 1321–22, speedily followed by his execution, with many of his adherents, as traitors, while Harcla was raised to the short-lived dignity of earl of Carlisle.

Elated with his success over his rebellious nobles, Edward prepared again to invade Scotland, as it turned out for the last time. While making his preparations, Douglas and the earl of Moray entered England by the Western Marches about the Translation of St Thomas (3d July), and penetrated five miles beyond Preston in Amounderness, doing enormous damage. They returned by Carlisle about 12th July, and lay around the city in tents for five days, departing on the 24th, after an inroad lasting for three weeks and three days, during which they seem to have encountered little or no opposition.[1] Edward, who was at York at the time, ordered the earl of Carlisle to summon the array of Cumberland, Westmorland, and Lancaster, to repel the invaders, and all the cattle to be driven to Yorkshire to escape them.[2] During this invasion the town and castle of Lancaster were burned to the ground.[3]

1322. Edward II. (Robert I.)

Edward and his army entered Scotland early in August, and, marching up Lauderdale,[4] descended on Edinburgh probably by the valley of the Esk. He found no one to oppose him, for the King of Scots, after causing all the cattle of the Merse and Lothians to be driven into the interior, had retired beyond the Forth, and fixed his camp at Culross. The only documents here relative to this invasion are a roll or pay sheet of the English foot at Leith on 23rd August[5] and a list of medicinalia provided for the King by his physician or surgeon, which names drugs, &c., still known in the modern pharmacopœia.[6]

Famine compelled the invaders to retreat without loss of time. In so doing, Fordun[7] says, they plundered Holyrood and Melrose, at the latter of which abbeys they murdered the prior, a monk, and two blind lay brethren, wounding many others to death, and, casting out the Host on the high altar, carried off the silver pyx which had contained it. They also totally destroyed Dry-

The entire number is 6783, every county in England being represented, except Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, Lancaster, and Durham. The forces of the first four were arrayed under the earl of Carlisle, in defence of the March, and the men of Durham were not bound to serve except in defence of the bishopric. Hence their name of 'Halywere folc.' The pay for the above day was 90*l.* 10*d.* Besides the counties, the towns represented were London, Cambridge, Rochester, Salisbury, Exeter, Oxford, and Buckingham. But the document, the enrolment of which may not now exist, shows that the statement of Knyghton (Hailes, Ann.), that 16,000 of the army perished from excesses on their return to England, must be very wide of the truth. Walsingham, more cautiously, says a great part of the army perished thus after returning. Vol. i. p. 166.

burgh and other holy plaees with fire. On getting back to England early in September, Edward appointed the earl of Carlisle chief warden of the whole Mareh,[1] and announeed to the bishop of Durham his intention of remaining in its defence, ordering him to see to the safety of Norham eastle, of whieh Sir Thomas Gray[2] (father of the author of Scala Cronica) was then his eonstable, a man who, as his son relates, was the hero of many gallant exploits on both sides of the Border.

The Scots lost no time, for on 17th September they were before Norham,[3] Edward being then at Neweastle, where he remained till the 25th, proceeding by Durham and Barnard eastle to Rivaux abbey, whenee he despatehed a letter to Aymar de Valence on 13th Oetober, ordering him to join the earl of Riehmond and Henry Beaumont at Byland the following day, as the Scots were reported at Northallerton.[4] From a report by the eonstable of Norham[5] the Scottish foree around that place was small, not exeeeding 200 men. Their main army had taken the western route by Carlisle,[6] and by a rapid march surprised Edward at Rievaux on the 14th Oetober[7] (the very day after his letter just notieed), when his baggage was eaptured, and he eseaped with difficulty to York.[8] John of Brittany was made prisoner, with other distinguished persons, among them Sir Henry de Sully, a Frenehman of rank, who was afterwards employed to treat with Bruee. After this the Scots seems to have roamed through Yorkshire at their pleasure, taking ransoms from Ripon, Beverley, and other towns, and retired unmolested.

Another blow now fell on the unlueky English King. The earl of Carlisle, his most trusted lieutenant on the Border, turned against him, in form at least. This somewhat dark transaetion has been represented as an aet of the deepest treaehery. The editor is inelined to give it a different complexion, and to think that Harela aeted for the best interests of his eountry. From his position on the Marehes, no one eould see better the hopelessness of the unequal contest between a tried warrior like Robert

Bruce, and a man like his own sovereign, infirm of purpose, with but one aim pervading his mind,—a vague longing for revenge on the Scots. Robert I. himself, now in broken health, was probably anxious for peace, and we may almost with certainty conclude that advances were made by him to an honourable foe. We learn[1] that on 3rd January 1322–23 the earl of Carlisle met the King of Scots at Lochmaben in private, where they had a long colloquy. Its nature may be guessed from the document presently to be noticed. Edward having heard of this from some of the earl's neighbours and ill-wishers (for he had some, as the records show, envious possibly of his rapid rise from a simple knight to an earl), gave orders that no truce be made with the Scots without his knowledge, and that Harcla should attend him in person,[2] while the rolls were to be examined for his powers.[3] The indenture between the Scottish king and the earl,[4] which has not been quite accurately described by Lord Hailes (who quotes the Chron. Lanercost through the medium of Tyrrel),[5] does not, on a fair consideration of its tenour, seem of a treacherous nature. Its chief offence was no doubt the acknowledgment of Bruce's royal title, and its implication that Edward was unfit to govern his own kingdom, except with the advice of twelve councillors not of his own choice. The other conditions are fair even from an English point of view, and the prospect of peace is said to have greatly rejoiced the commons, farmers, and poor people of the north of England. The manner of the earl's capture, as described in the Chronicle of Lanercost,[6] inclines one to think that if he had been the traitor Edward believed him, he would not have allowed himself to be so easily taken by surprise. That the sudden condemnation and attainder of this eminent Border warrior was looked on as irregular and unjust, appears from a petition presented to Edward III. by Henry his nephew and heir, praying for its reversal.[7] It was ordered to be farther considered. The result does not appear.

Edward was, nevertheless, forced to conclude a truce with the Scots for thirteen years, at Thorpe, near York, on 30th May 1323.[1] The remaining years of his life were uneventful as respects relations with Scotland. In 1324 negotiations were set on foot for a final peace, which were not concluded at the close of his reign. The period of truce probably favoured some revival of trade between the countries.[2] And the borderers, the non-combatant part of them at least, must have welcomed the cessation of wars in which they were the first to suffer. The ruined condition of the English side may be gathered from the inquisition[3] of the extensive Tyndale possessions of the Comyns of Badenoch, showing their miserable rental contrasted with former days of peace,—the petitions of the burgesses of Corbridge, the prior of Gisburne, the abbot of Thorneton, and many others.[4]

The disastrous reign (for England) of Edward II. having closed by his abdication on 24th January 1326–27, his son, a boy in his 15th year, ascended the throne which he was to occupy for half a century, and in that time to work much harm to Scotland, though its King was his brother-in-law. The first campaign of the new King against the Scots was not a successful one. We have full and interesting accounts of it in the pages of Barbour and Froissart, from which Lord Hailes[5] compiled his account—still the best. Various reasons are assigned by historians for the invasion of the Scots. The truce concluded by Edward II. had been ratified by his son on 6th March,[6] and negotiations for a permanent peace authorised by him. Whatever were the reasons moving the King of Scots, they must have been weighty to induce him to break peace. He despatched an army under Randolph, Douglas, Donald of Mar, and other leaders, which invaded England before 15th June.[7] The Chronicle of Lanercost says 20th July, but this is a month too late. It adds that the King of Scots having become 'leprosus, illâ vice cum eis 'in Angliam non intravit.'[8]

Edward III. with his army, estimated at 50,000, including a body of heavy cavalry under Sir John of Hainault, are said[1] to have marched out of Durham on the 18th July, in search of the invaders, the smoke of whose incendiary fires was seen in the distance. It would almost seem that he may have been not far from the Scots at an earlier date. On 26th June he was at a place called 'Tudhou.'[2] On 4th July he was at another called 'Aldewerke,'[3] and had just received a letter of the day before from his uncle the earl Mareschal, who was evidently within reach of the Scots, then reported to be at Appleby. Edward ordered the chancellor, then at York, to cause the forces there to be 'sent on' to himself. This indicates that he had left York before the 10th July, the date assigned by Lord Hailes. There are no doubt writs tested at Topcliff, near York, on 10th and 12th July,[4] but formal instruments, as protections and the like, were often issued by the chancellor though the King was not present. At all events he crossed the Tyne at Haydon bridge, near Hexham, before 22d July,[5] remaining there till at least the 26th, awaiting intelligence of the Scots, who, instead of being as was supposed, on their route home,[6] were then in a strong position far to the south, on the banks of the Wear. The English army re-crossed the Tyne, probably at Haltwhistle, seven miles higher up, where they were on the 28th,[7] and on their march southwards through that rough country, were met by Thomas de Rokeby, who brought news of the Scots,[8] and under his guidance the English army came in sight of them next day, possibly 31st July.[9] As Edward was at Stanhope, on the north bank of the Wear, on 3rd August, according to the writs here,[10] and was in Durham on the 5th, it is possible that the celebrated night attack by Douglas on his camp, in which the King had a narrow escape, took place between these dates.

of Barbour and Froissart must be consulted. The young English King's rough lessons in Scottish warfare doubtless sharpened his hostility in future dealings with our country, for he is said to have wept on learning that after his toilsome marches and counter-marches the enemy had escaped.

It has been said above that the absence of the King of Scots from this inroad was due to a different cause from that assigned in the Chronicle of Lanercost.

The editor discovered a document[1] proving that while one division of his force was occupying the attention of Edward III. on the Marches of his kingdom, the King of Scots was making a diversion in their favour in the north of Ireland. By this instrument he grants a truce for a year to the people of Ulster, on condition of their delivering a certain quantity of wheat and barley in the haven of Ulringfrith.[2] His own seal and that of Maundeville the English seneschal, though now lost, were once appended to the deed, executed at Glendouyn on 12th July 1327, the precise date at which Edward and his army were in search of Douglas and Randolph. Glendouyn is evidently the valley through which the river Dun runs into the bay of Cushendun in Antrim, a few miles to the south of Torhead, called in the old maps of Ireland the 'Scots' warnyng fyre,' where beacons were lighted by the Ulster Scots to summon their countrymen to their aid against the English or Irish.[3] It is a remarkable instance of the energy of this great man in his closing years, labouring under incurable disease, that he should have thus revisited alone the country where his only surviving brother had met his death. There is one other allusion to this expedition in a document[4] which speaks of Bruce being frustrated in this design, undertaken 'par faux covine' of the Irish. In none of the histories of Ireland is there any reference to it, so far as the editor is aware.

sea, after meeting his forces returning from their successes in England, is said to have led his army in August against the East Marches, and, while he besieged Norham castle, to have despatched Douglas and Randolph to attack Alnwick. Neither operation was successful, and several Scotsmen of note fell before Norham.[1] While the King still lingered there, overtures were made by Queen Isabella and Mortimer for a marriage between her daughter Johanna and young David Bruce. These eventually ended in the treaty of Northampton, between the two countries, in April 1328, 'on conditions honourable for the Scots and necessary for England.'[2] 1327–28. Edward III. (Robert I.)

During this period amicable intercourse took place between the two countries, which had been strangers to these amenities for a quarter of a century. Churchmen of one country were restored to their old possessions in the other which had been confiscated during the war, and three English nobles—Percy, Beaumont, and Wake—were to be reinstated in their Scottish estates. These were provisions of the treaty. No other persons were to have any claim for forfeited estates in either country. Thus the restitution to Sir James Douglas of the manor of Faudon, in Northumberland, an old possession of his family, was by special favour of Edward III.[3] And we find Edward in his turn writing to Robert I.[4] in behalf of John de Torthorald, going to claim his heritage in Scotland.[5]

The King of Scots was not present at the marriage of his son and the English princess at Berwick on 12th July 1328.[6] Worn out by disease and his long struggle, the hero was now spending his last days in retirement at Cardross, on the frith of Clyde. There is a pleasing record of his abiding interest in the affairs of the kingdom he had done so much to restore, in two original letters written from Cardross to the King of Eng-

This derivation of the name is obviously incorrect, for the seals are not attached to the roll but to the separate deeds of homage, of which it is only the record or enrolment.

'Robert the Bruce,' as his countrymen love to call him, rather than Robert I., is one of those names that will live till time is no more. A noble and distinguished writer[2] has well described his career in these words:—'vacillating and infirm 'of purpose, a courtier and a time-server at the footstool of 'Edward during the days of Wallace, and betrayed into 'sacrilege and bloodshed on the very steps of the altar at 'Dumfries, he redeemed all by a constancy, a patriotism, and a 'piety, alike in his troubles and his prosperity, which rendered 'him the pride and example of his contemporaries, and have 'been the theme of history and of a grateful posterity in all 'succeeding ages.'

'The restorer of Scottish monarchy'[3] was one of those rare characters who, shaking off the evil influences of early life, ripen into statesmen and heroes. Robert Bruce, forced into action by unforeseen events, revealed his great qualities in the stern trial of his revolt against his royal patron. Though his nearest kindred and friends perished by the headsman's hands, while, deprived for years of the solace of his wife and daughter, he wandered with a faithful few on the mountains of his country, his resolute spirit bore him through troubles and disasters, till his constancy was rewarded by success. His faults were those of his time, his merits all his own.

Bruce has been fortunate in his historian. While the real fame of his precursor Wallace has been obscured by the legendary exploits chronicled by the blind Minstrel,[4] Barbour's great work is a worthy tribute to his hero, and in all essential points stands the test of historical criticism. 1329–30. Edward III. (David II.)

[4] It is unfortunate that the patriot's career is so scantily illustrated by historical records,—that his difficulties in dealing with the jealousy of the great nobles, his statesmanlike views as to aid from France, with the part taken by the commons of Scotland in the struggle, are only to be learned, with trifling exceptions, from Henry's Wallace. Where not plagiarised from Barbour, much of that curious poem is mere romance, or treats of people who lived, and events which occurred, long after Wallace was in his grave. To give a few out of many examples,—'auld Rukbe,' governor of Stirling in 1297, slain there by Wallace (book vii.), can be no other than Sir

The touching commission given by the dying King to his tried comrade Sir James Douglas, beautifully told in Barbour, is well known, and the death of Douglas in Spain, the burial of his bones with his ancestors in the kirk of Douglas, under a 'fair alabaster tomb,' and of the Bruce's heart in Melrose abbey.

It would be interesting to know Douglas's route before landing in Spain. Barbour[1] says

> 'For betuix Cornwaill and Bretaynné
> He sayllit; and left the grunye[2] of Spainye
> On northalff him; and held thair way
> Quhill to Savill the Graunt cum thai.'

This shows that after getting through the bay of Biscay they coasted Portugal, and, rounding Cape St Vincent, landed at Seville on the Guadalquivir. An interesting tradition survives in the north of Spain, showing that Douglas may have touched there.[3]

The King of Scots having passed away, Randolph took the government as regent for the young King David. Lord Hailes confesses himself somewhat at a loss to explain why the condition of the late treaty that Percy, Beaumont, and Wake should have their lands, was fulfilled only in Percy's case. Probably, as he suggests, the part they had taken against the Queen

Thomas Rokeby warden of Stirling in 1337. 'Fehew's' brother, 'nephew of the English King,' killed before the fabulous battle of Biggar (book vi.), and 'Fehew' himself, slain in Yorkshire (book viii.), is no doubt Henry Fitzhugh, a Yorkshire baron, made prisoner at Bannoekburn. Sir Rauf Rymunt, also slain by Wallaee (book viii.), is probably Sir Thomas of Riehmond, slain at Lintalee by Douglas. And Crawford of Manuel (or Haiuing), said in two plaees (books vii. and x.) to have been made by Wallaee captain of Edinburgh eastle, must be Sir William Crawford, who held that post for Arehibald earl of Douglas, about 1409! (Original deed, eited in Fraser's Douglas Book, vol. iii. p. 405). A eritical edition of the Wallace is much to be desired.

Dorregaray, who was a Basque, pointing to a large grey stone near his tent, said it was a memorial of a great warrior ealled 'El Dugla,' who eame long ago to fight the infidels in Spain. mother and Mortimer, combined with the danger resulting to Scotland if Beaumont regained Buchan, and Wake the castle of Hermitage, induced Randolph to protract a settlement of their claims. Edward III. besides, by permitting Edward Balliol's return to England,[1] gave rise to the suspicion that he was favouring the rival house.

The regent's action, however, was before long to occasion disaster to Scotland. Immediately after the fall of Mortimer Edward III. demanded restitution of the estates of Beaumont and Wake.[2] A reply was made in February following that the King of Scots and council would deliberate with the bearers of the letter on 18th March at Berwick.[3] Without waiting for this meeting, Edward, on 24th February,[4] addressed a further demand to the Scottish King and council for a favourable answer, which was followed by other communications in April,[5] still without success. Other causes of complaint arose—one regarding the manor of Upsetlyngton,[6] north of Tweed, opposite Norham, claimed by the Bishop of Durham as the patrimony of St Cuthbert, in which he was supported by Edward.[7] This claim was also evaded, at least unsettled, at the close of the year 1331. In this state of affairs the disinherited barons, or 'les querelleurs,'[8] who now included in their number Gilbert Umfraville and David de Strabolgy, earls of Angus and Athol,[9] Richard Talbot, Henry Ferrars of Groby, and others of note, resolved to invade the country with which their King was nominally at peace. It cannot be doubted that Edward III., if he did not connive at, must have suspected the objects of these barons, more especially from their association with Edward Balliol. Henry Beaumont and his wife had a royal licence to lease their lands in Leicestershire for 12 years on 11th June 1332,[10] perhaps to raise funds for the enterprise. Walter Comyn, a relation of Beaumont's wife, had a protection going beyond seas with him till Easter, on 2nd December previous.[11] After the expedition had sailed from Ravenshere, on the Humber, in July, Edward gave orders, as if they were still in England,[1] to his warden of the Scottish March, to see that the peace was kept, and two days later to the chancellor to issue writs to the sheriffs to repel the expected invasion of the Scots.[2] He was then at Wigmore on the Welsh march. Not long before, he had been holding intercourse with Randolph,[3] and later in the same year, after the success of Balliol's[4] expedition, was pressing on the Pope the urgent necessity of appointing an Englishman to the vacant see of St Andrews.[5]

1332. Edward III. (David II.)

At this critical period, while the danger of invasion was imminent, for in all probability Edward Balliol and his associates were then at sea, the regent Randolph died at Musselburgh on 20th July, 'a man to be remembered while integrity, prudence, and valour are esteemed among men.'[6] The Scottish parliament made an unhappy choice of his successor in Donald earl of Mar, a man who could know little of his countrymen. He had certainly, with one exception,[7] lived continuously in England during the reign of Edward II., and only left it for his own country some months before the expedition of Edward III. to the north in 1327.[8] His inexperience and rashness were fatal to Scotland. Historians differ as to the numbers of the armies which met at Dupplin moor on 12th August 1332, nor do the records say anything. It may be permissible to hope that the regent's force was not so large, nor Balliol's so small, as generally stated.

The battle was a complete overthrow of the Scots. The regent, the earls of Moray, Menteth, and Carrick, and other barons, with knights, men-at-arms, and foot to the number of 15,000, were left on the field.[9] The loss of the English was inconsiderable—2 knights, 33 esquires, and a small number of foot. The records in this volume give no details. Sir Thomas Gray[1] says that Roger de Swenarton was drowned in the passage of the Earn, possibly the 'querelleur' of that name of whose claims Lord Hailes professed himself ignorant.

Balliol was crowned at Scone on 24th September, the earl of Fife, who had been one of the Scottish leaders at Dupplin, and William St Clair bishop of Dunkeld, the same who had valiantly opposed the English in Robert Bruce's reign, assisting at the solemnity.[2] Our illustrations from record of this time are scanty. The King of England seems to have been treating with both parties at the same time. On 25th November a considerable sum was paid to a knight sent to prosecute the King's affairs in the Scottish parliament,[3] whether King David's or Balliol's is not stated. And in December, besides sending two commissioners to treat with the new regent, Sir Andrew Moray, he empowered Henry Beaumont to treat with the magnates in a friendly manner.[4]

We are indebted to Sir Thomas Gray[5] for an interesting account of the proceedings of Balliol and his adherents at this time. After his coronation they left Perth for Galloway,[6] going by 'Coil' and 'Conyngham,' where the people 'par de sa leau de 'Cree' joined them.[7] They then went by Crawfurd moor to Roxburgh,[8] and near Jedburgh, Archibald Douglas who was lying in ambush, was discovered and discomfited, Robert Lauder[9] junior being there made prisoner. While Balliol was lodged at Kelso, and his army at Roxburgh, he was removing his quarters to the latter place for fear of a rise in the Tweed. Sir Andrew Moray, observing this, suddenly attacked the bridge at Roxburgh, with the object of destroying it and cutting off Balliol. But the garrison sallied, and a detachment, swimming their horses across the flooded river, routed the Scots, and captured the regent, who was sent a prisoner to Edward III.[10] While the English parliament was at [8] A very circuitous route.

[9] The Lauders rose to prominence as adherents of Robert I. a few years before this time.

[10] Lord Hailes, following Fordun, places this affair in the early spring of 1333, after Balliol's flight from Annan and his return to Scotland.

York, Balliol returned towards the West March, near Annan. And there, 'en un aube de jour,' as Sir Thomas Gray describes it, the young Earl of Mar, the Steward, and his late opponent Archibald Douglas, suddenly attacked his camp on 16th December,[1] killing about 100 of his men,[2] while Balliol himself escaped with difficulty to Carlisle. Whether the arrival in England about this time of Sir Roger and Humphrey Kirkpatrick, Adam de Corry, and their wives, under special safe conduct from Edward III., was connected with Balliol's return to Dumfries and rout at Annan does not appear. But Sir Roger seems to have been in danger of his life at home.[3]

1332. Edward III. (David II.)

Edward Balliol, after his first surprising success, showed himself utterly devoid of patriotism, or any feeling of responsibility for the integrity of his titular kingdom. Besides giving away titles and estates to Englishmen who had assisted him, of which there are many examples here,[4] he proceeded to do homage to England and dismember his kingdom by making over Berwick-on-Tweed, with the Scottish border counties from the Forth to the Solway.[5] And the strange spectacle was soon exhibited of a siege of Berwick by an English King aided by the titular King of the country attacked. Archibald Douglas, youngest brother of the 'good' Sir James, who had been chosen regent on the captivity of Sir Andrew Moray, raised an army for its relief. There are much more precise accounts of its number and composition than usual, which are given with much clearness by Lord Hailes.[6] The number of the English army is not given, nor its disposition, farther than the fact that Edward Balliol commanded one wing. The armies met at Halidon, on 19th July, where the Scots were totally routed, their whole army of nearly 15,000 men being either slain or prisoners. The Regent Douglas fell mortally wounded, and five earls,—Ross, Sutherland, Menteth,[7]

Lennox, and Athol (John Campbell),—besides many barons of eminent rank, were left on the field. The English loss was trifling, as they had maintained their ranks unbroken, while their archers, from a secure distance, galled the Scots struggling on foot through a marsh to assault their strong position on the slope of a hill. The Earl of March, one of the defenders of Berwick, joined the English King, and was rewarded for changing sides by a grant of £100 of land to himself and his wife 'Black' Agnes Randolph.[1] John Crabbe, the Fleming, having, it is said, been badly treated by the Scots, also changed sides, and distinguished himself in the siege of the town which, fifteen years before, he had so skilfully defended.[2] He also was duly rewarded, and thenceforth appears to have been in English pay.[3]

Though Scotland seemed prostrate, yet a few resolute men had secured some places of strength. Malcolm Fleming was in Dunbarton castle, while Lochleven, Urquhart, and Kildrummy were in patriot hands, the last being held by Christian Bruce, sister of the late King. John Thomson, probably the same retainer of the Bruces who had served in their Irish war,[4] was in command of the island fortress of Loch Doon, in Carrick.

About this time the young King David and his Queen are aid to have been taken from Dunbarton to France by Sir Malcolm Fleming.[5] Fleming, with many other Scotsmen, had safe conducts to England on 20th November 1333, 'on the King's affairs,' and 'matters touching the King,' but what these may have been is unknown.[6]

Lord Hailes comments on the 'disgraceful transactions' of Balliol's parliament at Edinburgh in February 1333–34, which agreed to dismember the kingdom and yield up the national liberties, so hardly won. The caustic remarks of the chronicler of Lanercost,[7] already referred to, apply to the disastrous period succeeding Halidon. A few, such as Sir Andrew Moray, who had been released, and the High Steward, maintained the national cause; but the greater number of the Scottish barons took one side or other as capriee or self-interest prompted them. Sueh were David earl of Athol, Alexander Moubray, Geoffry his brother, Godfrey Ross, Michael and David Wemyss, Riehard Melville, Miehael Arnot, and others. John de Strivelyn, said to have been one of those renegade Seotsmen,[1] and a prisoner at Halidon, was not a member of the Scottish families of Cadder or Carse. In 1330 he is styled of East Swynburne, and, if not a Northumbrian, was probably a Berwiek man,[2] but may have had Scottish eonnections. His career was a distinguished one, but altogether in the English interest, as will be seen hereafter.[3] The Earl of Mareh, who had received many favours from Edward III., now seems to have finally abandoned the English interest,[4] his motives being probably those assigned by Lord Hailes.[5] Eustace Maxwell lord of Carlaverock, on the other hand, became Edward's liegeman.[6] The formal instrument by which Balliol made over to the English crown some of the finest districts of Scotland, ineluding the chief fortress of its ancient kings, is dated 12th June 1334.[7] The eounty of Peebles, though one of these, and having an English sheriff, does not seem to have been mueh under foreign eontrol. There are no revenue aeeounts of it extant here, while of the others ceded there are very full and interesting details for the years 1335–36 and 1336–37,[8] a period for which there are no similar reeords preserved in the General Register House.

his aid. Balliol, who had come by Berwick, met him at Glasgow,[1] where a great riot took place, in which an esquire called Gournay was killed by 'lez marchies' because he bore the same name as the assassin of the late King. Both armies committed great ravages, and Balliol, with the earl of Warenne, on whom he had conferred the earldom of Stratherne, took the castle of Cumbernauld. Their united forces reached Perth by 13th August.[2] Edward III. returned to Berwick by way of Edinburgh, where he was from 10th to 18th September.[3] He there gave orders for the rebuilding of the castle, the dismantled condition of which had caused the surrender, on 30th July before, of the count of Namur and his contingent, who are mentioned in several writs about this time.[4] While returning from his escort of the count across the March, the earl of Moray was made prisoner in a Border skirmish and sent to England,[5] where he was kept for six years. While the English King was at Roxburgh on October 29th, some dealings took place between him and an emissary of Sir Andrew Moray[6] as to the truce, which was about to expire on the morrow of St Martin (12th November). The English council appears to have been at Dryburgh. The battle of Kilblain, in which David earl of Athol, a young noble who had changed sides with rapidity unusual even for that age, was slain, took place in the end of this month. Its precise date has been much discussed, and Lord Hailes has a learned note on the subject, which would have been unnecessary had the evidence now known been then available.[7] This is the sheriff's compotus for Dumfriesshire,[8] from which it appears that the earl died on 30th November 1335, the date given by Fordun. Lord Hailes was puzzled by the agreement between Balliol and John of the Isles,[9] in which he gives the latter the ward of Lochaber till the majority of the late earl of Athol's son and heir. As this instrument purported to be dated 12th September 1335, more than two months before the earl's death, an error was evident. The document being only a transcript, Lord Hailes assumed that the wrong month was given, and that it should have been December, not September. But attached to it are two letters, not printed in Fœdera, in the former of which Balliol, then at Perth, sends it to Edward III. for confirmation on 27th September, 5th of his reign (or 1336). Edward III. confirms it at Auckland, in Durham, on 5th October following. It is improbable that Balliol would have kept the indenture a whole year before submitting it to his overlord, and it is evident that it must have been executed in 1336.

1335. Edward III. (David II.)

A very interesting document occurs at this time,[1] showing the dilapidated state of Edinburgh castle, and the repairs begun by Sir Thomas Roscelin the English sheriff, between 13th September and 2nd November 1335, on which last date the command of the fortress was committed to Sir John Stirling, who at once set about the work in a very thorough manner.[2] Sir John had been made prisoner by the Scots, it is not told how or where; though it may have been at the siege of Lochleven castle, earlier in that year. Edward III., knowing his value, furnished substantial aid in his ransom, besides giving him many lands in Scotland.[3] His accounts for Edinburgh and its subordinate constabularies[4] testify to his activity in Edward's service, and afford a valuable record of the condition of the counties under English rule, for two years (1335–37). In these the patriotic adherents of King David are seen to have been ousted from their possessions, which were mostly in English hands, or in those of Scotsmen who preferred self-interest to that of their country. There were too many of the latter, for the garrisons of Edinburgh, Roxburgh, and Stirling will be found, on examining these compoti, to contain many Scotsmen.

On 8th June 1336, while his forces under Henry of Lancaster were at Perth, Edward suddenly arrived there. During this visit he made his romantic march through Athol and Lochaber, to release the widowed Countess of Athol, blockaded in the island fortress of Lochindorb since St Andrew's day 1335,[1] by Sir Andrew Moray, who was compelled to raise the siege. There are no details here, either of the besieging force, or of that with which the King ventured into the mountains, or of the route he took. It could hardly be done in one day, as an authority in Scottish history seems to maintain.[2] The same writer says his force consisted of 400 men-at-arms and as many light horsemen. Sir Thomas Gray[3] says he had only 100 men-at-arms with him when he first reached Perth. During the time he was in Scotland, from 8th June to 26th October, Sir Thomas Rokeby, with 14 esquires and archers, formed his personal escort.[4]

Edward had scarcely departed when Sir Andrew Moray is said to have attacked Stirling castle.[5] Sir Thomas Rokeby, who was warden there from 26th October 1336 till 30th August 1337,[6] in his compotus for that period, gives minute details of defensive works, yet makes no mention of a siege. Fordun also says it was not besieged till the summer of 1337. To this Lord Hailes objects that Edward III. was not then in Scotland. Herein, however, he is wrong, for the King was certainly in Scotland in June of that year, being at the wood of Calendar on 13th–14th, and in Stirling on the 15th,[7] of that month. As one of these writs makes mention of treachery attempted against Stirling castle, for which the warden beheaded four Scotsmen, there is little doubt that Fordun is right, and the time of the siege was the summer of 1337. In all likelihood Edward Balliol was also on this expedition.[8] Before June 1336, however, Sir Andrew Moray had besieged and taken the castles of Falkland, Leuchars, and St Andrews, in Fife. But he failed in his attack on Cupar, which was stoutly defended by William Bullock, an ecclesiastic. There is an interesting piece of evidence here regarding this siege. In May, Sir John Stirling warden of Edinburgh, who had assembled a flotilla of 32 vessels from various ports on the Forth,[1] suddenly crossed from Leith 'with his whole garrison,'[2] and relieved the castle, performing the expedition with great celerity in four days.[3] Bothwell castle had been captured in the preceding March,[4] and the indefatigable regent, having made a foray into Cumberland, laid siege to Edinburgh on his return. Of this, however, and its relief by an English force, there are no details in Sir John Stirling's compotus,[5] whose rebuilding operations went steadily on. At this date he had 70 Scotsmen in his garrison.[6]

1336-37. Edward III. (David II.)

It was fortunate for the Scots, as Fordun observes, that Edward III. was so much occupied with Continental war that he relaxed his military operations against his weaker neighbours. Among the desultory contests of this period, the siege of Dunbar stands prominent, from its gallant defence by the famous Black Agnes countess of March. The Earls of Arundel and Salisbury, with Henry Percy, were in command in Scotland,[7] though the two latter seem to have had the conduct of the siege. It began on 28th January 1337–38, and Edward III. may have been present, as a writ is tested at Berwick on same day.[8] His movements were very rapid, as he seems to have been at Alnwick on 26th March after,[9] having been at the Tower of London on the 15th.[10] The siege ended in a blockade, and the defenders having been relieved by a gallant sally of Sir Alexander Ramsay, it was raised about 10th June, under circumstances of discredit to the English arms.[11] The Fleming Crabbe had actively assisted in the siege, and was thenceforth in English pay.[12] Sir Alexander Ramsay, whose place of retreat is said to have been in the caves of Hawthornden, though the castle of Hawthornden was then held for the English by Sir

Laurence Abernethy,[1] performed many exploits about this time, and Sir William Douglas, the knight of Liddesdale, is said to have expelled the invaders from Teviotdale, though they continued to hold Roxburgh.

Sir Andrew Moray the regent, died about this time.[2] It has been shewn that he was the posthumous son of Andrew Moray the colleague of Wallace, killed at Falkirk in 1297, and thus not more than 40 years of age at his death.[3] The contents of the present volume confirm this view.

The High Steward (afterwards Robert II.), a young man of twenty-three, now became regent. Having raised a force, he appeared before Perth. He is said by this time to have tampered with the fidelity of William Bullock constable of Cupar, who surrendered that castle and aided him in the attack of Perth. This is not likely, for Bullock was still constable of Cupar on 12th December 1339,[4] when he received pay in that capacity. Perth was surrendered by Sir Thomas Ughtred, who had been warden since 4th August 1338,[5] on 17th August 1339.[6] The English council, in Edward's absence in the Low Countries, seem to have neglected this important place, for Ughtred had repeatedly complained of want of supplies,[7] and before he capitulated from famine had made a stout defence. Before its fall was known, if the above date is correct, Edward Balliol, with a force of about 1300 men from Cumberland, &c., was on his way to relieve it on 15th October.[8]

During the years 1339 and 1340 Edward III. was abroad, and while before Tournay he concluded a truce with France on 25th September of the latter year till Midsummer following, including the Scots.[9]

There is a compotus for the castles of Edinburgh and Stirling (July 1339 to January 1339 40) by Sir Thomas Rokeby, who was in command of both.[10] The garrison of Edinburgh was about 140 men, of whom 20 were Scotsmen; that of Stirling about 120, including 17 Scotsmen. On 16th April 1341 Edinburgh castle was surrendered by Sir Thomas to the Scots.[1] He gives no reason, merely the fact, and there is nothing to show whether it was captured by the stratagem described by Fordun or not. There were 115 men in it, among whom there is no knight or man of superior rank. Rokeby was certainly not there, nor is there any name resembling 'Richard Limosin,' whom Froissart calls the governor. 1341-42. Edward III. (David II.)

Lord Hailes[2] relates a foray by the Earls of March and Sutherland into England while Edward was before Tournay, and their repulse by Sir Thomas Gray, the extensive damage done by the Scots being shown by this volume.[3] But he says nothing of the account of Sir Thomas,[4] that during the winter after the siege of Tournay, Edward himself came to Melrose, and passed through Ettrick forest in a very bad season; and that Henry of Derby son and heir of Henry earl of Lancaster, jousted in his presence and by his permission with William Douglas. This visit is proved by two writs at Melrose, 20th and 27th December 1341.[5]

The next castle lost by the English was Roxburgh, on 30th March 1342, the date given in the constable's compotus.[6] His garrison numbered about 130, among them 23 Scotsmen, bearing such well-known Border names as Corbet, Heswelle, Ramsay, Scot, Home, Hage, &c. Sir Alexander Ramsay is said to have won it by escalade. The Scala Cronica says, that 'al they that were captyne of this covyne dyed after an il death.'[7] This was the case with the gallant Ramsay, who died of starvation in Hermitage castle, through 'envy that Wylliam Duglas bare hym,' whose office of sheriff of Teviotdale had been injudiciously given to Ramsay by David II. King David returned from France in June 1341, and is said to have served as a volunteer in forays made by the Earl of Moray into Cumberland and Northumberland in several of the following years.[8] Moray had been released from his six years' captivity in exchange for the Earl of Salisbury, a prisoner to the French, shortly before.

Stirling castle, which Lord Hailes, apparently on Froissart's authority, says was taken in 1339, soon after Perth, surrendered to the Scots on 10th April 1342, as Sir Thomas Rokeby states[1] 'from defect of victual.' He had about 130 men in garrison. The records here show that the Scotsmen in these various castles remained pensioners of Edward III.[2] They bear well-known names, e.g., Byset, Cragy, Dalmahoy, Ross, Macolagh, Daliel, Crawfurd, &c.

On 29th April this year[3] (possibly next year, for it is undated) a letter was sent by the Bishops of St Andrews and Brechin, the Earls of March and Moray, and Sir Thomas Chartres chancellor, probably the Scottish King's council, asking Edward III. if their King was included in the truce with France. This may assist in fixing the unknown date of King David's formal accession to this truce.

Before April 1343 Sir William Ramsay, who had been an English adherent up to May 1342,[4] had rejoined his countrymen, and his barony of Foulden, in Berwickshire, was confiscated[5] by Edward III. An inquisition of 26th May in the following year,[6] gives an interesting detail of the defects of Berwick castle, and the necessary repairs with their estimated cost. It appears that there had been no bridge across Tweed there since the time of Edward I., the sole communication being by a ferry boat.[7]

Edward III. having again declared war against France,[8] King David, in an evil hour for himself and his country, resolved, at the instigation of France, to invade England. While Edward was engaged abroad, he assembled his army at Perth. This projected invasion excited much apprehension in the North of England, as is evident from the letter despatched to the Council of regency on the 17th July 1346 by the Bishop of Durham and other lords in charge of the Marches.[9]

While Edward was engaged in the siege of Calais, the Scottish

King entered England early in October by the West Marches,[1] and took the pele of Liddel by assault, beheading Sir Walter Selby the constable, who was a man of note on the Border, being owner of lands in Durham, besides the barony of Prenderlathe in Roxburghshire, given him by Edward Balliol.[2] 1342–46. Edward III. (David II.)

After this exploit, the Knight of Liddesdale appears[3] to have counselled the King to abandon the enterprise and dismiss his army, advice unfortunately not followed; and they marched through Gilsland, skirting Tyndale, to Hexham, where the King is said to have numbered his forces, consisting of 2000 men-at-arms and a great multitude of hobelars and light-armed foot, perhaps swelled by English borderers, who were often indifferent as to the side they took. It is also said that he crossed the Tyne at Ryton, a little above Newcastle,[4] and thence urged his way into the bishoprie of Durham, cruelly wasting the country, and not even sparing the hallowed patrimony of St Cuthbert, fixing his camp at Beaurepaire, a country seat of the priors of Durham, about two miles north-west of the city, on 16th October. But from a document of much interest,[5] which marks his line of march after crossing the Tyne, he must have crossed many miles higher up, either at Hexham or Corbridge, at the latter of which towns the only bridge between Newcastle and Carlisle stood, some years before at least.[6] Had he crossed at Ryton, only five miles from Newcastle, he would have exposed his left flank to attack from the garrison.

The places named in the document referred to, through which the army marched, wasting and destroying, on Sunday before St Luke's day,[7] give clear evidence that King David kept wide of Newcastle. His route lay up the Devil water to Blanchelland abbey on the Derwent, where he entered the bishoprie.

The Archbishop of York and the other English leaders had assembled their forces at Bishop-Auckland, to the south-west of Durham. While on their march to intercept the farther progress of the King of Scots, they unexpectedly encountered a foraging detachment under the Knight of Liddesdale, who was put to flight. Attacking the main army without loss of time, the English gained the battle since known as Neville's Cross, after an obstinate conflict of several hours, on 17th October 1346.[1]

The loss of the vanquished was great. Besides their King a prisoner, John earl of Moray, the only surviving son of Randolph, Maurice earl of Stratherne, David Hay the constable, Robert Keith the marshal, Robert Peebles the chamberlain, and Thomas Charteris the chancellor, were slain. The Earls of Fife, Menteth and Wigton, Sir William Douglas, and about 50 other barons, were made prisoners. Lord Hailes says that the Earl of Wigton escaped.[2] This, however, was another Malcolm Fleming (of Biggar), who was allowed to escape from Newcastle by Robert Bertram his captor, while Malcolm the earl was already lodged in the Tower of London.[4] Two prisoners of rank were severely dealt with by Edward III.,—Duncan earl of Fife, for violating his allegiance to Balliol, and John Graham Earl of Menteth (in right of his wife), who had been sworn of the English privy council. Both were condemned to death as traitors, but Graham only suffered, the other being reprieved as a blood relation of the King of England.[5]

The anarchy which fell on Scotland after this battle must have been grievous, and we have in Scala Cronica[6] what is probably a good account of it, unfortunately only in Leland's abstract, the original from 1342 to 1355 being lost. Gray was now speaking of events under his own actual observation. He says, 'in the meane whyle that King Davy was prisoner, the lords 'of Scotland, by a litle and a litle, wan al that they had lost at 'the bataille of Duresme; and there was much envy emong them 'who might be hyest; for every one rulid yn hys owne cuntery; 'and King Eduarde was so distressid with his afferes beyound 'the se, that he toke litle regard to the Scottisch matiers.' Berwick with part of the county, besides Roxburgh and Dumfries, for the most part in the hands of the enemy, the road into Scotland was very open to an English army. 1346–57. Edward III. (David II.)

The chief interest of the remaining eleven years embraced in this volume, centres in the captive King of Scotland. A considerable part of his prison life appears to have been passed in Odiham castle in Hampshire, under charge of Sir William Trussell of Cublesdon, with whom he seems to have been on agreeable terms, for the knight was selected to escort the King back to his kingdom on the expiry of his captivity.[1] A pleasant incident is recorded in an order by Edward III. to his butler to send a pipe of Gascon wine to the Scottish King on 1st March (St David's day).[2] King David was in London on 15th May 1350, when two Scottish knights, about to be enlarged on parole, made oath in his presence to surrender themselves on a future day.[3] In 1353 negotiations previously set on foot for his ransom were renewed, King David himself being allowed to remain on the March in order to forward these.[4] In July 1354 the Commissioners for both countries entered into a formal treaty on the subject at Newcastle, ratified at Berwick on 12th November following.[5] It is sufficient to say that, after protracted negotiations for several years longer, the treaty for the ransom of the captive King was formally concluded at Berwick on 3rd October 1357, by which the Scottish nation agreed to pay 100,000 marks of ransom in ten yearly instalments at Midsummer. The documents concerning it will be found from No. 1642 to the end of this volume. Lord Hailes[6] accuses Rymer of inaccuracy in dating the commission by the Steward of Scotland to the Bishop of St Andrews and three others, to treat for the King's release, as 17th January 1355–56, the true year being 1356–57. The historian is himself in error, a rare occurrence, and Rymer's date is right, as shown by the instrument under the bishop's seal of 10th May 1356.[7]

The seals appended to the various documents by the Scottish clergy, magnates, and burghs, of which a particular description is given, are very interesting, those of the burghs unfortunately fast decaying.[1] Some of these the editor believes to be unique. The particulars respecting the escort of King David back to his own country appropriately close the extracts relating to this part of his reign.

Returning to notice the other events of the period succeeding the battle of Durham, it is seen that the English resumed without loss of time the counties of Roxburgh and Dumfries, with part of Berwick.[2] The Scottish landowners in the English interest also were reinstated in their possessions.[3] Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock joined England, being received by the Earl of Northampton, the heir of the Bohuns, who then held, and continued long after to hold, Lochmaben castle and King David's paternal estate of Annandale.[4] Singularly enough, according to Fordun,[5] the chief of the MacDowals, the hereditary enemies of the reigning house, who had suffered much for nearly 50 years for their adherence to England, was induced or compelled by William lord of Douglas, to acknowledge the captive King of Scots. The year, according to Fordun, was 1356, but Lord Hailes makes it 1353, on the authority of Fœdera.[6] From a document of 14th June 1346,[7] it appears that Sir Duugal and his eldest son were then hostile to England, and prisoners there four months before the battle of Durham, though Hailes includes them in his list.[8] Fordun's real date may therefore be 1346, and 1356 a transcriber's error. They were still prisoners in September 1347,[9] but then probably came to peace, for Dougal MacDowylle, perhaps the son, is a witness to a charter of Edward Balliol's in December 1352.[10] Some petitions without date, from members of the family, should perhaps be placed earlier;[11] these show their losses in the English interest.

Edward Balliol, between the years 1348–52, appears to have made extensive grants from his patrimonial estates in Kirkcudbright to Sir William de Aldeburgh, son of his old adherent Sir Ivo.[1] 1355. Edward III. (David II.)

There is no reference here to the Border fight at Nisbet in the Merse, in 1355, where the Earl of March, with the French auxiliaries, made prisoner Sir Thomas Gray constable of Norham, after a stout resistance against heavy odds, to which event we owe the Scala Cronica. Both Fordun and Leland relate it, but the gallant Northumbrian's own account, which would probably have been fuller, is in the lost part of his chronicle. The surprise of the town of Berwick, shortly after, is merely alluded to.[2] The imminent risk that the castle also might be captured brought Edward III. down in hot haste, and the town was surrendered to him before long. While he was on the Border in January, Edward Balliol, who seems to have found occupation in hunting, as relief from the cares of sovereignty,[3] and was weary of his position, made a formal resignation to him of all his rights in the kingdom of Scotland, by a series of instruments executed at Roxburgh and Bamburgh between 20th and 27th January 1355–56.[4] His reasons are quaintly given in Leland's abstract:[5]—'the Scots 'wer ful of rebellion; he had no heyre nor any very nere of 'his linage; and he could not tell better wher to bestow his 'title and corone of Scotland than on him,' &c. Lord Hailes gives a very interesting summary of his career, adding that he died childless [1363].[6] There is reason, however, to believe he lived some years longer, as will be shewn in the next volume.

There is no mention here of Edward III.'s incursion in the spring of 1356, when he ravaged the Lothians, destroying the celebrated 'Lamp of Lothian,' which is commemorated by Fordun, and also admitted by several English chroniclers.[7] It was in every way unworthy of the English King, and impolitic in the last degree.

1329–37. Edward III. (David II.)

The documents in the Appendix will be found of much interest. No. II., a portion of the compotus of the Chamberlain of Scotland for 1328–29 has been printed, because the duplicate in Her Majesty's General Register House[1] is imperfect at the beginning, while the corresponding part of this is nearly complete.

Nos. III. and VI., being the compoti of sheriffs and other officers of the counties and burghs transferred by Edward Balliol to Edward III., for two years of the English occupation, 1335–36, and 1336–37, while much alike in many respects, as embracing the same part of Scotland, will be found to contain considerable differences in details, such as changes of ownership, falling off or increase of returns, &c.[2]

Nos. IV. and V., the compoti of the wardens of Edinburgh and Stirling castles, the former for 1335-36 and part of 1337, the latter for nearly the whole year 1336–37, give examples of a class of documents—the details of construction or repair of fortified places—of which, to the best of the editor's knowledge, there are no others of so early a date in Scotland. From the number of masons employed, and the quantities of stone and lime mentioned, there must have been an extensive rebuilding of walls of some sort in Edinburgh castle, but whether external or internal does not appear. Nothing is said of a keep as among the works, the expression 'fabrica castri'[3] most probably meaning the buildings generally. The keep of a castle was always so strongly built as to remain entire though the outer fortifications were destroyed, and it may have been so in the case of Edinburgh. It is certainly stated in the indenture for the transfer of the command to Sir John Stirling by Sir Thomas Roscelin then warden,[4] that no 'dwelling' then existed in the castle except a chapel and a stable, both defective in their roofs. Still, a keep was not in strictness a dwelling, being only resorted to in the last extremity, after the outer works were carried by the assailants.

[2] For these three highly valuable records the editor has to thank Mr G. H. Overend, F.S.A., one of the officers of the Public Records. But for the circumstance of his re-arranging the collection where they were found, they would probably have escaped notice.

The houses for the garrison were evidently of timber, and the walls covered or built with turf[1] for warmth, very necessary at that height. The roofs of these houses were covered with straw or heath, fastened in the usual manner with 'wattelyngs' of twigs in considerable quantities.[2] The hall, pantry, kitchen, and other houses are specially named,[3] also straw, 'wekir,' and 'tempil' for their roofs.[4] Much timber was used on the great chapel, which was converted into a granary.[5] The editor believes it stood in the inner ward, south of St Margaret's chapel. There is a very interesting notice of four glass windows for this little chapel of St Margaret, unquestionably the oldest building in the castle, claiming an antiquity of nearly 800 years. The well is also mentioned as being repaired, and the wall of the 'barres,' or enclosed space in front of the principal gate, a very important outwork in a mediæval castle. The entire cost (including 30*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.* pay of the sailors in the fleet with which Sir John and his garrison rescued Cupar castle) was 454*l.* 14*s.* 6½*d.*, probably above 6000*l.* of our day.

The warden's account for Stirling shows that the hall and other rooms for living were also of timber, brought by water from Gargunnock, seven leagues up the Forth, where it was cut in July and August, when it must have been full of sap.[6] The partitions and ceilings were daubed with mortar, and the roofs were of turf.[7] The stone walls and turrets, a new wall 150 feet in length by 20 feet high, between the inner and outer bailey, one above the drawbridge and at each side of the gateway, and a new jail of stone, are mentioned as repaired or built anew.[8] The details of a new pele, erected in the inner bailey on the north side of the castle, entirely of timber, are curious; as also daubing the same with mortar as a precaution against fire. The bretagium, or projecting framework at the parapet, in which the defenders stood to throw missiles or shoot arrows on those endeavouring to sap the foundation, is named.[9] And there appear to have been two wells, one in the keep, the other in the outer bailey.[1] The cost here was nearly 280*l.*, somewhat above 4000*l.* of to-day.

Regarding No. VII., from the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum, a preliminary remark is necessary. It has been long known to Scottish historical students that there are in that national repository many valuable MSS. relating to Scottish history during the reigns of Edward I. and his son. Some of these have been made use of by Mr Stevenson, who has illustrated various works edited by him for the Bannatyne and Maitland Clubs during the last fifty years, by extracts from them. These books, however, are of limited impression, seldom more than 100 copies, and are only known to or consulted by a small class of readers. The extracts, valuable as they are, being only partial, do not give an idea of the originals.

It was thought, therefore, that the present would be a good occasion on which to give in their entirety such as were unprinted, and extracts touching Scotland from all that were not exclusively Scottish. They have all, without question, at one time formed part of the public records of the country, and have found their way to the Museum by gift, purchase, and otherwise. Their authenticity, from internal evidence alone, is beyond doubt.

This MS., No. VII., which is bound up with a number of others of much later date, contains, besides a few revenue accounts, the muster rolls of the eight castles which were still in English hands at the end of the year 1312, thus very shortly before the time when Robert Bruce, after a six years' arduous contest, began to shake off the enemy's grasp—for within the next two years all of them, except Berwick, fell into his hands.

The details, very distinctly set down, show the establishments of the several garrisons, and any one acquainted with surnames can easily detect the Scotsmen in each, and ascertain the proportion they bore to the English. The revenue accounts also speak for themselves. It is believed there are none for that year now existing in Scotland.

Edward II.
(Robert I.)

There is much interesting genealogical information in this volume—a good deal of it new. Some has been alluded to already in the earlier part of these remarks. Taking it in order of date, the inquisition held at Rutherglen,[1] in Clydesdale, on 17th September 1307, regarding Tolybotheville,[2] shows an intermarriage between the families of Cuningesburgh and Bickerton, then considerable landowners, now unknown in that position. The circumstance of the jurors, several of them evidently from the district where the land lay, being brought so far off as Rutherglen to the presence of the warden, indicates the unsettled state of the country beyond Forth.

The alliance between Sir Patrick Graham and a daughter of John of Lorne[3] is probably new. It is uncertain who Sir Patrick was, or another contemporary Graham, Sir David, in English pay in 1311–12,[4] and evidently a refugee with his family in England in 1313.[5]

Some proceedings took place on the death of John Comyn earl of Buchan, in 1308, which appear to support the legal doctrine[6] that the old territorial earldoms of Scotland descended to heirs general. Alexander Comyn, presumed to be his next brother, had predeceased him, leaving two daughters, minors, the ward of whose lands and marriage was given by Edward II. to Ralph Monthermer, on 3rd December 1308,[7] but recalled two days after in favour of Hugh Despenser.[8] But there was a surviving brother of the late earl, Master William Comyn provost of the King's chapel of St Andrews, who is found in possession of Shepesheued, one of the earl's manors in Leicester, on 7th June 1309,[9] and, having resigned his church preferment about that time, made a grant to Thomas earl of Lancaster, of two other Leicester estates of his late brother on 25th of same month.[10] He does not style himself 'Earl of Buchan' in the deed, but the legend on his seal appended, still extant, calls him William earl of Buchan. And the letter or precept of seisine is endorsed 'Com' de Boghan.' What steps he may have taken in furtherance of his claim do not appear so far as the editor has consulted the English records, but, whatever these were, he had renounced them, as on 8th March 1311–12 the Leicester manor of Whitewyk, which had belonged to him, was delivered to Henry Beaumont husband of Alicia Comyn, his eldest niece.[1] Just about a year before, Master William had gone to Rome.[2] If he was under no disabilities as to succession, this seems a distinct preference of the heir of line or heir general over the heir male—for the earldom descended to Alice Comyn, and was enjoyed in her right by Henry Beaumont her husband, during the reigns of Edward II. and III., though John their son never took it, contenting himself with the title of Beaumont, still existing in the English peerage. But for the hostilities between the countries he would unquestionably have become Earl of Buchan in succession to his mother.

About 1310, or soon after, Sir Alexander Balliol of Cavers, probably full seventy years of age or more, as he appears before the Barons' war in 1265—a man of considerable distinction, and, what was rare at that era, a consistent Scottish supporter of the English party, disappears from the scene.[3] He was succeeded by 'Monsire Thomas de Bayllol,' probably his son, who was 'of' Cavers in the following year.[4] He too was in the English interest. Nothing more is known of him except that he had a wife named Isolde, who receives 20*l.* due to him for his services in Scotland on 7th February 1312–13.[5] Some years later a Sir Henry Balliol appears as one of the leaders of the band which, under Sir James Douglas and Sir William Soulis, surprised and routed the Berwick garrison returning from a successful foray into Teviotdale, as already noticed.[6] He was contemporary with Sir Thomas, but the connection, if any, between them is as yet undiscovered.

The Lovels, the earliest possessors of the barony of Hawick known to record, appear often in this volume. Contrary to the statement of Dugdale,[1] the wife of Sir Richard, the head of the family, was not Muriella Douglas, but Muriella daughter and sole heiress of Sir John Soulis. In his right she was owner of Auld Roxburgh, which she and her husband exchanged with the King of England for other lands in the county of Somerset, this Roxburgh manor being necessary for the defence of the castle.[2] This arrangement lasted throughout the reign of Edward II. and part of his son's. Muriella was also owner of half of Wasterker, in Eskdale, which she and her husband reclaimed after the battle of Durham.[3] They had a son James, who married, but died before his father,[4] and in him the male line ended. 1308-33. Edw. II., III. (Robert I., David II.).

An important adherent of the English interest, Patrick earl of March, died 10th October 1308,[5] and was succeeded by his son, the last earl of that Christian name, then aged twenty-four.[6] This nobleman, throughout a long tenure of the earldom—for he held it to all appearance for sixty years,—took a leading part in the affairs of Scotland. He had been married at an early age to a lady of the name of Ermegarda,[7] but nothing more is known of her. At a mature age—he must have been close on forty—he married the elder daughter of the renowned Thomas Randolph, celebrated as Black Agnes of Dunbar, through which alliance the earldom of Moray eventually came to his family. But it does not seem to have steadied his political action. Remaining steadfast to Edward II. till the defeat of Bannockburn, after which he had sheltered the fugitive King from the pursuit of Douglas, he joined the Scots on or before 1316, and shared in the defence of Berwick when taken by Edward III. in 1333. He then suddenly changed sides and received a considerable grant of land, besides large gifts of money,[8] from Edward; then with equal abruptness he reverted to the Scottish interest, to which he adhered apparently for the rest of his life. He commanded the left wing of the Scots at the battle of Edward II. (Robert I.) volume.

Sir Hugh Ridelle or Ridel,[2] of Cranston-Ridel, a family which seems always to have been in the English interest, appears to have been the husband of Lady Maria Comyn,[3] another circumstance doubtless attaching Sir Hugh to that side. This family also possessed Wittering, in Northamptonshire, which remained in their hands long after they had lost their Scottish possessions.[4] Sir Hugh seems to have given it to Geoffry his son in 1316,[5] perhaps many years earlier, if the same grant is referred to in his recognisance on 1st August 1317.[6] It may be this Sir Hugh who died in 1318, a pensioner of the house of Wenlock.[7] In 1335, Hugh Ridell, son and heir of Sir Geoffry Ridell, and in all likelihood a grandson of Sir Hugh, asks from Edward III. restoration of their old possession of Craneston.[8]

It is worthy of remark that this family of Ridel is the only one that appears on the Ragman Roll, unless John of Lilleselyve 'del counte de Rokesburgh,' be one of the Roxburghshire Riddells, who divided Lilleselyve with the see of Glasgow. Nor do these Roxburghshire 'de Ridales' appear in these extracts during the war of the succession—a very remarkable circumstance, considering the antiquity of the family.[9] The evidence of the records, so far as they have been examined, points to the conclusion that the family of Ridel, of Cranston-Ridel and Northamptonshire, was a distinct stock from the equally ancient one of de Riddale of Roxburgh. The former race never used the particle 'de' and invariably spelt their surname with one 'd.' The latter always were styled 'de Ridale' or Riddale. The Cranston-Ridels were originally from Gascony, the others probably from the wapentake of Ridale in Yorkshire.

About this time there are various notices of Malise earl of Stratherne, his wife Agnes countess of Stratherne, and Malise son of the earl,[10] who were all in the English interest in 1311. This countess is not named in any account that the editor has seen.[1] Malise of Stratherne, probably the son, appears again on 28th January 1312–13 receiving money on account of his allowance from Edward II.[2] These dates, especially the last, entirely disagree with Barbour's account [3] that the earl and his son were both at the siege of Perth,[4] the father on the English side, while the son was with the Scots and took his father prisoner, who was immediately restored to his earldom by Robert Bruce. 1310–12. Edward II. (Robert I.)

The family of Cathcart also gave a representative to the English interest in the person of Sir William of Cathcart, a knight of Roxburgh garrison in 1310,[5] which is particularly interesting from the fact, related by Barbour,[6] that Sir Alan of Cathcart, a comrade of Edward Bruce, told him the story of the discomfiture by the latter, with 50 men, of Sir John St John with 1500, in Galloway, at which Sir Alan was present.

An inquisition[7] of the lands of Sir Robert Keith and other Lothian landowners, forfeited for being on the patriotic side, in February 1311–12, shows a Seton and a Ramsay sitting as English jurors on the land of another Ramsay, the 'Laird of Cokpen,' a patriot. Another of the jurors, William Bailli, bears a surname of some interest. He was, there is little doubt, Baillie of Heperigg, or Hoperig,[8] ancestor of the family which afterwards acquired, and has since been known as of, Lambinston or Lamington. This is the very first occurrence of the surname that the editor has seen. It is curious that nothing seems to be known of the real origin of the family. There is nothing here to favour the Clydesdale tradition that the first of them was a Balliol who changed his name. For, as we see, Balliol was an existing surname long after this date in Scotland.

In April 1313 the Countess of Buchan was released from her seven years' imprisonment for crowning Robert Bruce, and intrusted to the charge of Henry Beaumont, the husband of her niece.[1] Those who, notwithstanding Lord Hailes's just remarks on the absurdity of the common belief, still think that she was hung in a cage outside of the castle of Berwick, may refer to the document[2] for the construction of a 'cage' in but not outside of a mediæval prison.

Geoffry de Fressingleye, sometimes Frisleye, a surname which has entirely disappeared, one of the dispossessed landowners in the above inquisition, was owner of Duddingston, near Edinburgh. Lord Hailes could make nothing of this surname among the Scottish prisoners at Durham, unless it might be Frisel or Fraser; but William de Frisshelay, the prisoner in question, successor of Geoffry, appears in the sheriff's compotus for 1335–36 as the forfeited owner of Dodyngston.[3]

Some confusion is created by the contemporary appearance of two knights of the surname of Morham, both named Thomas. One of them, who was a prisoner at the death of Edward I., was released from the Tower in November 1314 in exchange for Sir John Segrave, made prisoner at Bannockburn.[4] The other, a month before, had a grant for life of Boulton in Allerdale, forfeited by Roger Moubray, a Scotsman.[5] He appears again in 1317[6] as being with Edward II. in England, and was evidently a different man from the prisoner. Though the surname is derived from Haddington, their property seems to have been in Stirling.

Johanna de Clare countess of Fife, widow of the earl who was one of the regents of Scotland during the interregnum preceding John Balliol's election, appears to have married as her second husband, soon after 1315,[7] Gervase Avenel, then apparently an English adherent. But on 2nd August 1317 her estate in Northampton was escheated, as she, her husband, and son the earl of Fife, had joined the Scots.[8]

Alan of Argyll, probably, from his armorial bearings, a son of John of Lorne, was retained in the household of Edward II. after his father's death, and often appears on service on the Marches.[1] His esquire, Duugal de Geyvelston (Gelston), was of a Galloway family, thus confirming the suggestion that the Macdougals of Lorne had some affinity with that district. 1319. Edward II. (Robert I.)

A petition, though undated, referable to 1319 or a little later, gives new facts regarding Bonkill, whose heiress Margaret was ancestress of the Steward and Douglas earls of Angus. This lady's mother, as we may presume—for, though she does not refer to her daughter or the relationship of her grandson, she styles herself Cristien widow of Sir Alexander of Bonkill,—complains of her losses by the Scots both in Scotland and Cumberland, and asks for restoration of her dower in the manor of Uldale, in Cumberland, which she had leased to Alexander Steward (her eldest grandson) on condition of re-entry if she survived him, but which had fallen in the King's hand by Alexander's death, being then his enemy. She must have been of considerable age, and had survived her daughter, her daughter's two husbands—Sir John Steward and possibly Sir David of Breghin (who was executed in 1320, while the petition may have been later than 1319), and her eldest grandson. Nothing more appears regarding this lady's case.

Many of the English King's Scottish adherents or their widows and children appear as pensioners throughout the reigns of Edward II. and his son. Duncan of Ferendragh (or Frendraucht), one of the chief of these in the north, had been killed in his service,[2] and Marjory, his widow, was long a pensioner.[3] Among others were Sir David of Betoigne, his wife, and six daughters,[4] William Byset, Gilbert of Glencairny and Meliora his widow,[5] who in 1340 had remarried an Englishman;[6] Sir Duugal Maedowal and Matillidis his widow.,[7] Johanna widow of Alexander Comyn of Buchan, a sister of Sir William Latymer,[8] and mother of the two coheiresses of the earldom, is one of those who long experienced English liberality. Among the number was Margaret Wake widow of John Comyn of Badenoch,[1] son of Bruce's rival, who was killed at Bannockburn while still a young man. His only son Adomar Comyn (evidently named after his grand-uncle Adomar or Aymar de Valence) died in childhood in 1316.[2] In him, as an eminent authority who loved to enliven dry details with a touch of sentiment,[3] remarks, 'expired the last gleam of 'the direct and once redoubtable male Badenaugh line, whose 'alliance was eagerly sought by the first Scottish and English 'barons.' His heirs were his father's two sisters, Johanna countess of Athol, and Elizabeth, afterwards wife of Richard Talbot of Goderich castle.[4] His mother married secondly Edward earl of Kent,[5] the younger half-brother of Edward II., who was executed for treason in the reign of Edward III. Her son by this second marriage was John earl of Kent.

A brief reference[6] recalls the widow of Alexander III. (Yoland de Dreux), who became Duchess of Brittany, and seems to have been in receipt of, or claiming, dower as his widow in October 1323.

It does not appear in these extracts when Sir Alexander of Abernethy, one of the most active adherents of Edward II., died. The latest notice of him here refers to his mission to Rome as one of the King's envoys in 1312, the expenses of which were paid him in April 1313.[7] In January 1324–25 Margaret of Abernethy, possibly his elder daughter, had leave to go to Scotland to treat for recovery of her lands.[8] This may be the lady who afterwards married the first (Steward) Earl of Angus, but in 1311 had been contracted to Roger Moubray.[9] She reappears in 1340 as Countess of Angus, forfeiting lands in Berwick and Roxburgh.[10]

A short reference on 18th September 1330[11] to a dispute regarding Faudon, in Northumberland, where Athelardus or Archibaldus Douglas is named, induced the editor to look for further information in several quarters. But it proved fruitless, as there are no assize rolls for the county of that date. Archibald

The probacio etatis, on 2nd April 1330,[1] of David earl of Athol, son of Earl David, who died in 1326,[2] having only survived his wife Johanna Comyn a few months,[3] is an interesting document of a class not known in Scotland. From the particular mention of the ages of mother and son in the inquisition last referred to, his mother was under twelve at his birth, a fact scarcely credible, but the figures are distinct. Sir John of Athol, who appears on several occasions about this time and later,[4] was perhaps an uncle. Who Sir Robert of Athol, the deforcer of the widowed countess when taking possession of the late earl's manor, Brabourne, in Kent, was, does not appear. But he seems to have had right of some kind to it, and was also in Edward's service.[5] Sir Adomar of Athol, who was an important man in Northumberland later in Edward III.'s reign, was a younger brother of the earl whose age was the subject of the probacio just noticed. His first appearance is in May 1336, when he has a grant of the ward of two of the late earl's manors in Northumberland.[6] He is always styled the King's cousin.

An inquisition[7] of land in Gloucester illustrates the connection between the English Berkeleys and those of Scotland, better known as Barclays, and shows that the Soulis family were related to the latter.[8]

In a former volume[9] it was shown how Sir William Moray of Bothwell had been stripped of his great estate, and died a prisoner on parole in England. From two documents in this volume[10] it appears that the grasping prelate of Durham, Antony Bek, had been concerned in his spoliation, having got a 'gift' from him, besides Lilleford in Lincolnshire, of the manor of Cralyng, in Roxburghshire, most probably to propitiate his good offices with Edward I. The date of these gifts does not appear,[11] but the bishop had given Cralyng to Sir William Dacre of Naworth in 1310, whose heir, Ranulph Dacre, was confirmed in possession by Edward III. on 20th February 1334–35. It is interesting as showing that the connection of the chief family of Moray with this quarter of Scotland was so considerable.[1]

Isabella countess of Mar, widow of the regent killed at Dupplin, appears to have had considerable leanings towards the English interest.[2] She held the hereditary sheriffship of Roxburgh, with its castle, by what title is not known. Besides a second husband, Geoffry de Moubray, whom she divorced,[3] she had a third, Sir William of Careswelle, either an Englishman, or a Scotsman in English pay.[4] Edward III. paid her for some years £100 in lieu of her sheriffship of Roxburgh, besides a private allowance of 2 marks weekly.[5] In May 1347 the King restored the castle and sheriffdom to her and Sir William of Careswelle, on a release by them of the £100 a year.[6] They do not appear again in this volume.

A curious notice in Dugdale is incidentally explained or corrected here.[7] In his account of the Montacutes or Montagues earls of Salisbury,[8] he says that Edward III. gave Sir William de Montacute while in Scotland a manor called Timbre-Eagle, the fact being that Sir William, as bearer of the King's crest, 'Tymbre de legle,' which must have been an eagle, received some manors to support the office.

The Mareschals, of whom there appear to have been two branches, one certainly connected with the office which the Keiths obtained by siding with Bruce, were steady adherents of England throughout the wars of succession. They were Galloway as well as Lothian landowners. Sir John, the head of the Galloway branch, died an exile, and, with Maduca his widow, Herbert his heir, and several daughters often appears in this volume.[9] Sir David, the head of the Lothian family, is also often found here.[10] His wife was one of the three coheiresses of Philip de

Moubray.[1] The other two daughters were married to Englishmen—Sir Robert Gower, a friend of Edward Balliol's,[2] and Anselm de Gyse, evidently, from his name, of a Gloucestershire family still existing.[3] 1335–46. Edward III. (David II.)

Sir William de Coucy, a younger son of that illustrious house, had a grant of the Lindsay barony, which they claimed as representing the elder line, in 1335.[4] And eight years later, Guy de Coucy, a younger brother, had a writ from Edward III. to receive the same lands.[5]

One of the Douglases, called 'William' in one place and 'Hugh' in another,'[6] held the prebend of Auld Roxburgh in the cathedral church of Glasgow, and had vacated it in or before 1346. This may have been the clerical head of the house of Douglas whose nephew William was lord in succession to him, and afterwards first earl.

The family of Raynton or Renton, afterwards of note in Berwickshire, seems to have sprung from a burgess of that name in Berwick.[7] He was probably a wealthy man, for some years before this time he had been kidnapped by Thomas Gray junior, son of the constable of Norham, in order to exact a large ransom,[8] a proceeding not altogether creditable to the author of Scala Cronica.

Though the Lauder family were in the patriotic interest, one member, Elizabeth, seems to have taken the other side, and was pensioned in England by Edward III. for 20 years or more.[9] As the Lauders make no appearance in public before the time of Robert Bruce, who seems to have given them extensive properties in Lothian,[10] this exception is curious.

The Gascon Sir Peter Libaud, who took service with Bruce after the capture of Edinburgh by Randolph, and was endowed with considerable estates in Lothian, which he soon forfeited, being executed by Bruce for treachery real or suspected,[11] is often referred to here.[12] His wife, lady Nichola, was in London in December 1312 exchanging gifts of palfreys with Edward II.[1] William de Seton her groom, was evidently a Scotsman. In what relation Sir Thomas Libaud stood to Sir Peter does not appear. He was one of the knights in garrison under Sir John Stirling in Edinburgh castle in 1335–36,[2] and likewise owner of Garmilton-Dumynge in Haddington,[3] and of the barony of Livingston in Linlithgow. He was dead before 26th September 1336, on which day the above lands were seized in the King's hand by the forfeiture of 'his heir,'[4] for what cause is not said. On 1st December 1339 the Abbess of Shaftesbury is requested to receive Sibilla Libaud of Scotland, possibly Sir Thomas's widow, and her young son Thomas as inmates.[5] The 'damsel of Scotland,' Sibilla Libaud, an annuitant in June 1348,[6] must be a daughter of this lady.

The Knight of Liddesdale had left his daughter Maria as a hostage, during his traitorous dealings, with Edward III. At Midsummer 1357 Edward gives leave to Peter Tempest to marry her.[7] The marriage probably never took place, as she died young,[8] and the estates of her father descended to the Douglases of Dalkeith, now represented by the Earl of Morton.

The genealogical questions illustrated by the compoti during the English occupation 1335–37[9] are so various that a mere allusion to them must suffice. They serve to illustrate the great transference of property which took place during these long wars, as one side or other gained the upper hand, and the influx of English owners,—Bradstan, Berkeley, Neville, Lucy, Stirling, Thirlewall, and others,—while Edward III. held the Lothians. The large possessions of the Knight of Liddesdale, both in Linlithgow and Edinburgh, derived partly from his father and partly from his wife, heiress of the Grahams of Abercorn and Dalkeith, are given with much fulness. Another Scottish family—that of Meygners or Menzies, the same name as the English Maners—were extensive proprietors in both of these districts. One of them was owner of Kinneil, afterwards identified with the surname of Hamilton. It seems also to be new, that the earls of Levenax at this date held a considerable estate at Glencorse on the Esk near Edinburgh.[1] Other surnames not so well known are also to be found throughout these rolls, which careful examination will reveal. 1335–37. Edward III. (David II.)

Probably as interesting as any of the other details which they contain, are those entries in the rolls relating to Cramond, Dene, Inverleith, and other lands lying around the capital of Scotland, showing the supplies of victual, fowls, fuel, &c., which their owners were bound to furnish to its ancient kings, which must date from a remote antiquity. Perhaps a relic of these customs exists, or lately did, by which the owner of Dean held the office of King's poulterer for Scotland.

The editor, while conscious that some may have been omitted, believes he has on the whole drawn attention to the leading questions of interest in this unsettled era of fifty years—the first half of which witnessed the revival and consolidation of an ancient kingdom under a great man, while the second saw the evil effects caused by the minority and rashness of his son, which left it a prey to outward foes and intestine broils, the effects lasting long after the latter's restoration to his throne.

As in the preceding volumes, the editor has to acknowledge with gratitude the facilities afforded and help given by the officers of the Public Records in the prosecution of his work, which has been unusually arduous in the present volume, from the very large number of collections, not exclusively Scottish, in which search had to be made; and where, unexpectedly, some of the most valuable compoti and documents now printed were found, as has been said above. It is far from improbable that in some of the vast collections of miscellanea, now for the first time to be set in order, there may be documents of great interest to both countries discovered.

March 29. 38. Inquisition [in virtue of writ dated at Langelee 25th November preceding] regarding the patronage of the church of Wooler, taken at Wooler in Northumberland on Friday next after the Annunciation of the B. V. M. in the first year, by Thomas of Rock [and 12 other jurors] who found it would be to the K.'s loss, if he permits Maria widow of Nicholas de Graham to give that patronage to the abbey of Alnewick in pure almoigne in proprios usus, for ever, because if the half of the barony of Muscampe, of which Maria is the lady in heritage, to which that patronage belongs, should fall in the K.'s hands, and the church be then vacant, the K. would lose the patronage, as the barony is held in capite. That the church is worth yearly 40 marks. [Inq. ad quod damnum, 1 Edw. II. No. 8.]

[Memoranda.]

[1308.] June.

47. Agreed if it please the K. to have a Parliament at Westminster in 3 weeks from Michaelmas. Proclamation to be made in England that though the K. had lately summoned his service for the Scottish war, to meet him at Carlisle at the next Octaves of the Assumption of our Lady [Aug. 23], nevertheless the K. for divers reasons, delays the said aid of men-at-arms at that date, for he does not mean to go to Scotland so soon as he thought. Also the foot to be warned not to come to Carlisle yet. So also the carriages to be countermanded. Victuals to be sent as needed to the K.'s castles in Scotland. The K. to take no truce or soeffraunce from Robert de Brus, but the wardens of Scotland there may take such as long as possible, as they have done hitherto of their own power or by commission, so that the K. however may furnish his castles with men and victuals; and that no one be taken or other 'mesprision' made during such truce. As to the men-at-arms towards Berwick,—the Earl of Angus, Sir William de Ros, Sir Henri de Beaumount, each with forty English men-at-arms, to guard this side of the Scottish sea, between Berwick and the water of Forth (Ford), and the Marches of Annandale, Carrick, and Galloway. And the Earl of Buchan, Sir John de Moubray, and Sir Ingram de Umfraville to be wardens of Galloway, Annandale, and Carrick—each with forty men-at-arms. And Sir Alexander de Abernithi, Sir Edmon de Hastinges and Sir John le fuiz Marmeduk to be wardens beyond the Scottish sea between the Forth and Orkeneye, with 120 men-at-arms (one with more and another with fewer), besides garrisons. And that in their commissions each be bound to aid the other if need be when required.[1] Letters of credence in Sir John le fuiz Marmeduk's name, to be written to the Earl of Angus and Sir William de Ros of Hamelake the guardians of Scotland, that it is the K.'s pleasure they take truce from Robert de Bruys, as from themselves, as long as they can, but not beyond the month of Pasques, so that if on one side or other people are taken or misprision made, it may be redressed; and the K. to victual and garrison his castles during the truce; and that he may break the truce at pleasure, if the others will yield this point; but if they will not, the truce to be made without it. Norman French. [No date.] [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

[1308.] 49. Petition to the K. and Council by William Byset, shewing how After the late K. sent Sir Eymer de Valence then warden of Scotland, the July 25. Bishop of Chester, Sir Robert de [Eyn]curt and Sir John de Botetourt, to him at Lanercost, offering him 200 marks of land for his service during his reign, with which he was content. And the present K. adjourned it to Windsor before his Council, promising to do him reason at his first coming to Scotland in August last past, which did not happen. He prays the K., in fulfilment of the good will which his father had for him, that he be not a loser for his service. Also he farther prays some sustenance, for the Scottish enemies have taken possession of all his lands there. And he farther begs the K.'s letter to the Chancellor of Scotland, for delivery of the lands of the wife of John Byset his brother, which are in the ward of Sir John de Segrave, that she may have seisin of the same, inasmuch as she was of full age at 'le Sein Jake' last past. [No date.]

(Endorsement) Respited till it is found how much land will content him, and the K. will have regard to his great service. Response to second petition scored out. As to the third petition. Let him have a writ from Chancery to the Chancellor of Scotland to do justice according to the custom of the country. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 1274.]

EDWARD II. (Endorsed) 'De ista summa habet dictus Henricus assignacionem
—— in portu ville de Berwyco.' [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1308–9.] 80. John of Argyll to the K. Received his letters on 11th March after for the tenor of which he greatly thanks 'his Majesty.' He was on March 11. sick-bed at their reaching him, and had been for half a year. Robert de Brus had approached his territories with 10,000 or 15,000 men, it was said, both by land and sea. He had no more than 800 to oppose him, 500 of these being in his pay to keep his borders, and the barons of Argyll gave him no aid. Yet, though he and his were few in respect of his power, Robert de Brus had asked a truce from him, which he granted for a short space, and received the like, till the K. sends him succours. He hears that Robert, when he came, was boasting and saying that the writer had come to his peace at the report that many others would rise in his aid, which God and the writer know is not true. Should the K. hear this from others, he is not to believe it, for he is and will ever be ready to serve him to the utmost of his power. He has three castles to guard, and a lake 24 leagues long on which he has vessels properly manned, but is not sure of his neighbours. So soon as the K. or his power arrives, he will be ready with lands, ships and others to aid him, if sickness does not prevent him; but if it unfortunately so chances, he will send his son with his forces to the K. [1309.] Nov. 19. 107. The writer [anonymous] tells his dear lord, that on the 17th the K. and Queen and the Earl of Cornwall left York for the south. Since his correspondent left, the K. has done much harm in the country, taking corn and 'bestes,' &c., exempting no man except his correspondent and his possessions. He has executed his orders as well as he could, in selling corn, despite the K.'s hindrance, and has paid part of the money. The quarter of wheat is 10*s*., barley, 6*s*. 8*d*., 'meillu' and oats, 3*s*. 8*d*. As to the 'Lardir,' in spite of the K.'s doings preventing his purchases, he will set about it quickly. Some 'bestes' are bought, and 12 of the smaller, best able to travel, are sent to London. The 'gros vyuz bufs,' are kept back, as they could not be driven so far. Forty pigs are sent as ordered, and the lardir will be filled in time with God's help. His 'provohst' of Nynphorp is in great arrear, and those of Wilton owe much money and are poor. He has audited [oy] the 'count' of Catton, but can do nothing final without his correspondent, as it touches his profit. All his other commands shall be attended to. Begs him at his leisure to think of the writer's needs. 19th November. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Dec. 13. 112. The K. to the Abbot and convent of Gedworthe. Sends to them the bearer Ingelram of Cologne their fellow canon, who as he understands received hard usage from his enemies in Scotland, begging them to receive and protect him in their monastery for his sake. Westminster. [Close, 3 Edw. II. m. 16, dorso.]

Dec. 16. 113. The K. on the reiterated petition of Alexander de Balliol, commands that the custody of the late Robert de Hugham's manor of Hugham held of him by knight's service, be restored to him, which the escheator had seized along with a tenement of Robert's in Wymring in Kent, held of the K. by the service of finding a man, a horse worth 5*s.*, a sack and a broche for 40 days in his army in Wales. Westminster. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 3 Edw. II. m. 13.]

Dec. 20. 114. Ordained at London on 20th December in the 3rd year that Sir Robert de Clifford be Warden of Scotland, with a force of 100 men-at-arms and 300 foot, besides garrisons of castles, until Easter next; 60 of the men-at-arms of his own retinue, and 40 of the household at the K.'s pay under Sir Robert de Felton. [Clauses as to tournaments and war arising in England follow.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea, No. $\frac{9}{11}\frac{03}{}$.]

Seals lost. Damaged.

[1308–9.] 115. Petition to the K. and Council by the burgesses of Roxburgh, shewing that his father ordained in Parliament at London that those of them who came to peace on Sir John Comyn's conditions, should inherit their lands within and without the burgh, Master William Bevercotes chancellor, Sir John Sandale chamberlain, and Sir Adam Gordon being appointed commissioners, and having found who were entitled. But as nothing was done, the petitioners sued the late K. at the Parliament of Carlisle, when redress was again ordered. It being still unfinished, they pray the K. for his father's soul to command his will to be done. [No date.]

EDWARD II. (Endorsement) The K. being about to visit these parts, will then —— hear their reasons and do right. [Parliamentary Petitions, No.
[1308–9.] 6879.]

[1309.] 116. Edmund de Hastings to the K. Begs a letter to the Chamberlain of Scotland to pay the garrison of Perth both for the time of Sir Aymer de Valence and Sir John de Bretayne, and that he himself as warden of the garrison have full power over the town as he had in Sir Aymer's time. There are 34 men-at-arms, 60 crossbowmen and 80 archers in the town, and their pay is more than 20 weeks in arrear. Begs that no judge but an Englishman be appointed over the garrison, as it would be too much for them to be tried by Scotsmen during the war. Also a protection for his Irish lands and a writ to the K.'s bailiff at Caderlaw to surcease distress of his ward at Cloulaynan for a debt of Sir William Cadel the ward's grandfather, as he had a writ from the late K. to that effect. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

117. [Anonymous, John of Argyll?, apparently to the K.] Tells him that his health is a little better since 'Mestre Johan vostre fusisien' left him, and he hopes God willing, to get well, and serve him more. Begs him to show grace and favour to one of his valets in the matter which Sir John de Benstede will tell him verbally. [No date.] [Royal Letters, No. 4152.]

Autumn? 118. The K. declares that as it was found by 'enqueste' in his father's reign, returned to the wardrobe, and by his own command brought before the Council to try the credit of Malise earl of Stratherne, that he had been loyal to his father, and was therefore acquitted at Westminster of 'male fame,'—he grants the Earl 'frank de sei en toutes choses' and discharges him and his mainpernours to date, viz., Patrick earl of Dunbar, Robert Thonny, Alexander de Abernethy, and Henry de Sencler, of one maynprise not to pass the Tweed, and of another by the said Henry de Saint Clere and William Byseth as far as the Tyne. R. Miscellanea* (Wardrobe), No. $\frac{12}{14}$.]

EDWARD II. —— [1310.] Nov. 25. 177. [Anonymous, perhaps the Chancellor.] The writer says that the K. and Queen and company are well, and will remain this winter at Berwick, the Earl of Gloucester at Norham, the Earl of Cornwall at Roxburgh, and the Earl of Warenne at Wark. The prelates and earls 'ordenours' who were at London, are much disturbed and enraged at the K. having ordered all the 'places' to be removed to York by the close of Easter, and each has gone to his own district, having privily arranged to return together; so many fear evil. The Earl of Lincoln has told the K. this is a bad time to give such orders, and he will no longer act as his lieutenant or keep the peace. But the writer thinks the Earl and the K. understand each other. Tells his correspondent that Arnaud Brocas the bearer will give him the latest news from Scotland, as he came in hot haste from the K. to York while writing, to call on him on his way to Gascony with messages from the K. Begs him to do no business except as instructed by himself, who gets his orders under the Privy seal. Begs him to give these news to the Bishop of Norwich, Sir Guy Ferre, and William Inge. York, St Katherine's day.

(Endorsed) Presented by E. de Brok', 2nd January. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

(Endorsed) Sir Griffith ab Rees can 'alledge' nothing as to his going to Scotland, without the K. himself, for he was chosen in the K.'s presence. [Privy Seals (Tower), 3 Edw. II. File 11.]

[1307–10.] 186. Memorandum by the 'Commune' of Scotland to the K. and his ministers in Scotland:—(1) Though they have purchased a truce for the safety of the country and their allegiance, and included the castles and towns in their bounds, viz., the sheriffdoms of Berwick, Roxburgh, and Edinburgh, some of the sheriffs allow no goods to leave their castles, or their garrisons to pay for what they buy (in the sheriffdom of Edinburgh, at least one fourth part), and the country is so poor that they cannot get on without ready money, and beg the K.'s special order to that effect. Again, when the people 'del enemiste' come to bargain under the truce, their goods are taken by some of the castellans and K.'s officers, endangering the truce, as the robbers are resetted in the castles. And they earnestly pray the K. for redress against these and other oppressions against the common law of the land, and special letters to his servants; likewise for a good 'Examinour' over the latter to redress their outrages in

EDWARD II. cancelling and suppressing the K.'s former letters on the petitioners' —— behalf. They beg a reply by the bearer. [No date.]

[1310–11.] Feb. 19. 197. [Anonymous.] The writer relates his coming to New Castle about 8 days before Christmas with the Chancery, leaving the seal there, joining the K. at Berwick, receiving his commands to return to London with the Chancery by the octaves of St Hilary at latest, his stopping at Durham after St John's day (December 27th), where he received his correspondent's letters of 21st and 27th November, by 2 vallets on their way to the K., mentioning the proposed purchase by the Pope's nephew of the City of Lectovie and other castles and towns. [After some further general news,] expresses great admiration of what his correspondent has said to the K., in the letter of which he has sent him a transcript, and his plain speaking. The K. has sent it to the Earl of Lincoln, who was this Christmas at Kingeston in Dorset, to hasten his return to London at the octaves of St Hilary. As to other news—when he was in the North, Sir Robert de Clifford and Sir Robert fitz Pain had by the K.'s leave been at Selkirk 8 days before Christmas, to speak with Robert de Brus, and since then the Earls of Gloucester and Cornwall were to have parleyed with him at a place near Melros, but it was said he had been warned by some he would be taken, and therefore departed, so they have had no parley. London, 19th February.—P.S. Begs that the Bishop [of Norwich], Sir Guy Ferre, and Sir William Inge may hear the news, but that no others read this letter. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

Trace of round red wax seal on back.

1310-11. Feb. 26. 198. The K. leases to Guido Touche honeste, merchant of Lucca, Robert de Brus's lands in Tottenham from next Easter at the rent of 12*l.* [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 4 Edw. II. m. 2.]

Mar. 5. 199. The K. to W. bishop of Worcester, the chancellor. As John de Knockes the husband of Isabella daughter and one of the heirs of the late Robert de Ros of Werke, has asked his wife's purparty of her father's lands both in England and Scotland, and the K. hears that William son of Sir William de Ros of Hamelake is in possession of the manor of Werke, he commands that the sheriff of Northumberland be instructed to summon William to appear before the K. on the morrow of next Ascension Day, to shew cause why he should not

EDWARD II. resign the lands to the claimants under the conditions granted by the —— late K. to Sir John Comyn and his adherents. Berwick-on-Tweed.
1310-11. [Privy Seals (Tower), 4 Edw. II. File 5.]

1311. 200. The K. commands W. bishop of Worcester, the chancellor, to March 26. search the Chancery rolls for the recognisance granted at Comenok 1st of his reign, by Sir David de Strabolgy earl of Athol, Sir Aymar de Valence, Sir John de Hastynges, Sir John Comyn earl of Buchan, Sir John de Moubray, Sir Alexander de Abernethy, Sir Alexander de Balliol, Sir David de Breghyn, Sir Edmond Comyn, and Sir William de Cardoill, jointly and severally to his 'brother' Sir Rauf de Mohermer for 5000 marks, payable in 10 yearly instalments, none of which are yet paid, and issue letters for the arrears. Berwick-on-Tweed. [Privy Seals (Tower), 4 Edw. II. File 5.]

[1311.] 201. [Anonymous.] The writer says the Earl of Cornwall came from March 27. Perth the other day 'molt privement' with Sir Henry de Beaumont, and scarcely any attendants, on some business with the K. The Earl has undertaken to keep the country beyond Forth till 3 weeks after Easter, and left Berwick for Perth on the eve of the Annunciation last. Before he left, Sir Henry de Beaumont had this answer regarding the constableship of Scotland: "Sir Henry, you have claimed 'the constableship as the right of Aliz your wife, 'cousine' and one 'of the heirs of the late Sir John earl of Buchan. The K. is not 'sufficiently advised of his right to give a final reply, but commits 'the office to you during pleasure, to be given up when it pleases 'him to decide the right." [Concludes with news of the English magnates.] Berwick, 27th March. [Letter of same date from the K. to the Chancellor follows.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

April 4. 202. [Anonymous.] The writer says the Earl of Cornwall had gone to Perth before he arrived at Berwick, where he found the K. and Queen well. He left on the eve of Palm Sunday for London, but having much to do as he goes through Lyndeseye, he cannot reach London so soon as he hoped. A secret illness also troubles him much, compelling him to take short journeys, but he expects to reach London by the 2nd or 3rd day after the octaves of Easter. The K. is in no mood yet for a Parliament, but when the Earl of Gloucester and the Council meet in London, he will have to do what they order. The K. pays no attention to the writer's representations that he cannot fulfil his constant orders for supplies, but believes he will always have enough. It was said that Robert de Brus meant to fight with the Earl of Cornwall; but he did not believe he was able to meet the K.'s forces in a plain field. The Earl remains at Perth till 3 weeks after Easter, when Sir Henry de Percy and the Earl of Angus are to take his place with 200 English men-at-arms, besides other great Scottish lords; and Sir Robert de Clifford with 100 men-at-arms is EDWARD II. to survey the castles south of Forth, and do his best on the enemy till the 'grass,' when the host may foray and get supplies for the horses.

[1311.] Has received his letters and those from Gascony, and will hasten to London in consequence. Will then give him some news he could not commit to writing. Alnwick, 4th April. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

1311. April 9. 203. The K. to the Chancellor. Being greatly desirous that the fleet which he has ordered to set sail for Scotland and the coast of Argyll, under the orders of his liege Sir John of Argyll, should be ready as soon as possible, seeing it is one of the greatest movements in the Scottish war, he sends him Sir John's vallet, who has just arrived on this business, with his own messenger the bearer, ordering that instant letters be sent by their hands to all the towns of England, Ireland, and Wales, which were lately applied to for the fleet, ordering all these towns to reply at once as to their preparations, and appointing the day when their ships shall join the fleet at Wolryngford in Ulster. Berwick-on-Tweed. [Privy Seals (Tower), 4 Edw. II. File 11.]

Damaged towards foot.

[1311.] April 14. 204. [Anonymous.] The writer says they have good news of the K. and Queen and their company. The Scots are daily coming to his peace and his will. The Earl of Cornwall is at Perth with 500 men-at-arms, and will remain there till three weeks after Easter. The Earl of Gloucester is come to England, and will be at London at the quinzaine of Easter, where the prelates, earls, and other 'ordenours' will also be. He fears a great 'riote,' chiefly from the 'grossour' between the Earls of Lancaster and Gloucester, and wishes to God that the affairs in which his correspondent is occupied could be kept back a year or two, that he and the good people in his company might come to England to keep peace and love in the land, of which it never had more need than now. Encloses transcripts of letters with other news, one from the K. and two others from the Treasurer and Sire William de Melton. Asks him not to impute the 'marvellous commands' which reach him from day to day, to the K.'s damage and the correspondent's disgrace, to himself, for, on peril of his soul, he has opposed and delayed them as hitherto to his best ability. Begs news of his state. Windsor, 14th April. Asks him to impart these tidings to the good people in his company. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

[1311–12.] Feb. 22.

246. [Anonymous.] The writer [after some remarks on the peace with France] says to his correspondents, addressed as 'sires,' that as to Scottish news, the K. was in a good way with his war, and likely to do better, if God will. The Earl of Cornwall was gone to Perth with a great 'route' of people to keep these parts. As to England, the Earl of Lincoln was with God, and to be buried at St Paul's the first Sunday of Lent. The Earls of Lancaster, Hereford, Pembroke, and Warwick were at London, about what business he could not say, but would when he knew. London, 22nd February. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Same hand as No. 177.

EDWARD II. —— 1311–12. Feb. 22. 247. The K. commands the collectors of customs of wool and hides in Perth to pay the whole of these to William de Olifard his keeper of the town, in satisfaction of the K.'s debt to him. York. [Close, 5 Edw. II. m. 13.]

On 17th of same month the sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk had been commanded to ship 200 qrs. wheat, 200 qrs. malt, 100 qrs. beans and pease, and 100 qrs. oats, and send them with all celerity to William Olifard for the garrison of Perth. [ib.]

March 5. 248. The King commands the sheriff of Northumberland to defray the expenses of Mary de Brus and Walter de Moray, Scottish prisoners in Newcastle-on-Tyne. York. [Close, 5 Edw. II. m. 12.]

March 8. 249. The K. commands his escheator ultra Trent to deliver the manor of Whitewyke in Leicester, lately belonging to John late earl of Buchan and William Comyn his brother, and surrendered by the latter to Alicia and Margaret their nieces and heirs,—to Henry de Beaumont Alicia's husband. York. [Close, 5 Edw. II. m. 10.]

March 11. 250. The K. commits the manor of Temple Neusome in Yorkshire and the fruits of the Templars' church of Whytekirk, to John of Argyll in aid of his support, together with the stock, till further arrangements for his benefit. York. [Patent, 5 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 15.]

March 12. 251. The K. commands R. bishop of Durham, out of his debt due the K., while the temporalities were vacant, to pay Alexander de Abernethy 200*l.* towards the K.'s debt to him for his service in Scotland. York. [Close, 5 Edw. II. m. 8.]

March 13. 252. The K. to the Consuls and echevins of the city of Stralsund [Stralleshunt] in Eastland. Requests them to release the arrestment which they have made on the goods of Roger Bishop burgess of Berwick [and others the K.'s merchants of various English ports], to the amount of 1100 marks, which they allege has been done in reprisal for a vessel of their city burned at Berwick by John de Botetourte, then admiral of the late K.'s fleet, and the money lost therein. For he says their vessel was a lawful prize of war, being in alliance with the Scottish enemies. Signifies it will be necessary for him to arrest their goods in England in the event of a refusal. York. [Close, 5 Edw. II. m, 10, dorso.]

March 13. 253. The K. commits the custody of the Templars' manor of Wetherby in Yorkshire to Margery widow of Duncan de Frendraught during pleasure, with right to take firewood only from the timber. York. [Patent, 5 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 15.]

March 14. 254. The K. being due Peter de Loubaud constable of Edinburgh castle and the pele of Linlithgow, and sheriff of Edinburgh and Linlithgow, 1416*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, arrears of pay for his garrisons, assigns to him the customs of wool and hides at St Botolph's town till the same are paid. [1313.] Oct. or Nov. 337. Petition to the K. from the people of Scotland, by their envoys Sir Patrick de Dunbar earl of March and Sir Adam de Gordon.

(1.) Since his departure from Scotland at the Gule of August three years ago, they have suffered losses by their enemies to the amount of 20,000*l.* Matters are daily getting worse, and for the 'suffraunce' they have till this Martinmas, they had to give 1000 qrs. of corn. Yet their live stock is plundered, partly by the enemy and partly by the garrisons of Berwick and Roxburgh, especially by Gilbert de Medilton and Thomas de Pencaitlande, and their company at Berwick.

(2.) When 'upplaunde' people go to buy their 'vivers' in Berwick, the garrison spy out and seize them, confining some in houses, and carrying off others to Northumberland, holding them in concealment and 'duresce' there till they get a ransom—and the Scots are fined in Northumberland for resetting them. They took from the Bishop of St Andrews 8 tuns of wine, and when he was commanded by the K. to go to Berwick on his business, he was so rudely received and menaced in life and limb by the garrison, that he dared not come.

(3.) Some of them, at the end of the 'suffraunce' at Midsummer purchased from Sir Robert de Bruys at his late coming, a truce of 15 days, and on his retreat, after they had returned to their houses, the next morning the warden and whole garrison of Berwick came and took their people in their beds, carrying them off dead and alive to Berwick, and held them to ransom, viz., on this foray within the Bounds in the earldom of Dunbar, both gentlemen and others, to the number of 30. Also 300 fat beasts, 4000 sheep, besides horses and dead stock.

(4.) Some of the Berwick garrison, with Thomas de Pencaitland, as 'Guyde,' carried off some of the poor people to Berwick. Those who had wherewithal were ransomed; those who had nothing were killed, and thrown into the Water of Tweed.

(5.) During the truce till Midsummer [la St John], which the K. had ordered his servants to observe in all points, came Sir William de Felyng constable of Roxburgh, and took certain people, for whose EDWARD II. —— [1313.] deliverance they had to pay him 80 marks, and also to the enemy 160 marks, as a fine for his breach of the truce.

(6.) The Roxburgh garrison also, instead of protecting his lieges, plunder and imprison the merchants who come there.

(7.) When the aldermen and commune of Roxburgh, at the request of Master John de Weston the K.'s chamberlain, came to make complaint to the constable of their treatment and losses, he appointed them to meet him next morning, when he would do reason. When they came, he at once arrested Sir Adam de Gordon and imprisoned him against all manner of justice, which arrest has astonished all his good people of Scotland, and they pray the K. for redress. [No date.]

(Endorsement, as if a vivâ voce reply) 'Seigneurs,' our lord the K. well knows the complaints and grievances contained within, and as soon as some pressing and weighty matters are disposed of, will send redress. Thanks them for their good port and encourages them. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Fœdera, ii. 247. On 28th November of this year, the K. made a formal reply to this petition, announcing his intention to lead an army to their relief at the following Midsummer.

Under the Queen's privy seal, as the K. has not his own beside him at present. [He lost it at Bannockburn.] Berwick-on-Tweed. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 8 Edw. II. m. 6.]

[1314.] July 12. 369. [To the K.] The writer [Andrew de Harcla ?] tells him that they might have harassed the Scots oftener on the March of Carlisle if it had been strengthened by the men-at-arms and others appointed to come to Carlisle at the writer's late departure from him at York, as he has otherwise assured him. The present news is that the whole force of the Scots will enter England at this March this Tuesday the 14th July, and will make an 'assaie' at the city, for which they have prepared ladders and other engines, as he knows by certain spies, and as Duugal Makdowelle the K.'s bachelor, the bearer, will tell him by word of mouth. That if they do not besiege Carlisle they intend to approach the K., wherever he may be. Whichever road they take, he hopes it will be the means of restoring the Royal power, which may God ever increase and maintain. Carlisle 12th July. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

EDWARD II. —— 1314. July 18. 370. The K. orders an assignment to Sir William de Argentein nephew and heir of the late Sir Giles de Argenteyn, for 288*l.* due by the K. to the latter, that he may defray his uncle's debts and discharge his soul. [1314.] Aug. 13. 384. The Mayor, bailiffs, and community of Berwick-on-Tweed to the K. Thank him heartily for his letter sent by Master John de Weston chamberlain of Scotland, and are taking every precaution

EDWARD II. —— [1314.] for the safety of the town. Since his late departure they have not suffered so much from the Scottish enemy as from some people of Northumberland, in revenge for the death of John de Aspley, Thomas de Henghowe, the Brothers de Trolop, and other traitors who were 'aingeetz' in due form before the justices in Eyre, for their treachery in trying to betray and sell the town to the enemy. Their leader is Sir John de Linborne, with Robert de Bolton and his brothers, the Brothers de Rodum, Allissaundre Purveys, and others, who tried to kill Colle de Derby the K.'s servant, at Alnwick, on his way to the K. on the writers' business, in company of Johan le Irays, had not Sir John de Felton warden of Alnwick, rescued him, —and this because he was one of the above justices with Sir Henry de Boys and Sir Ivo de Aldeburgh. They have sworn to kill any Berwick man found in Northumberland. They have also suborned the widow of John de Aspley to appeal Colle before the coroner and sheriff of Northumberland for her husband's death. [Remainder faded and illegible, but they urge the K.'s immediate attention to these matters.] 13th August. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 3.]

1314. Aug. 16. 385. The K. commits to Margaret widow of John Comyn son of the late John Comyn [of Badenoch], for the support of herself and their son Adomar, the manors of Mannfeld, Geytinton, and Harewelle, as possessed by her late husband, slain in the K.'s service in Scotland, to be held during pleasure. An endorsement bears they were sent to the town of St John of Perth in August in the 9th year. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army) No. $\frac{3}{7}\frac{6}{}$.]

EDWARD II. [1315.] Sept. 14 (shortly after).

447. [Anonymous. John of Argyll?] to the K. Says he came to Dublin the morrow of the Nativity of Our Lady (9th September), and is awaiting the navy of the Cinque Ports, which has not yet arrived as he writes. As the season is passing, begs him to command the Justice of Ireland, the Treasurer, and Sir Alexander Convers to pay him his people's wages, for which he must answer to them; and, as the Justice and Treasurer are at present away in Munster, and Sir Alexander will not pay without their joint assent, begs his pleasure. Dine, Sunday next after the Exaltation of the Holy Rood. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 6.]

1315 Sept. 18.

448. The K. to Louis K. of France and Navarre. In answer to his request to aid him with his navy against the Flemings, excuses himself on account of his late troubles with the Scots, who have since entered Ireland plundering and burning, whereby he has sent his ships there and towards the East to harass them. Ditton.

(Postscript endorsed) Part of his vessels have not gone out of port yet, and they are ordered to harass the Flemings if in those seas. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

Sept. 21. Fœdera, ii. 278.

449. Memorandum:—That Edward de Balliol, who had given security to return from abroad about Michaelmas, appeared in propria persona before the K.'s Chancellor Sir John de Sandale, in his house near Aldgate, London, on the Feast of St Mathew apostle and evangelist, in the 9th year. [Close, 9 Edw. II. m. 27, dorso.]

Sept. 27.

450. The K. sends the bearer Master Nichol de Culewenne (who has just arrived with letters from Sir John de Ergail, requesting that six ships of the K.'s fleet be allowed to remain with him in Ireland this winter to harass the enemy), to the Chancellor and Treasurer, that they may summon the Council, and order what they think best in aid of the Scottish war. Ditton. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 4.]

Oct. 1.

451. Writ sending the Chancellor a petition by Bertram de Tranemor, and to remedy his grievance if true. Ditton.

(Enclosure) Petition by Bertram shewing that while he was master of the K.'s ship 'James de Karnarvan,' Thomas Dun, Hogyn Giffyn, Wadyn Sochorene, and Gybon Malyltone, with a great 'navye' of Scots, came on 12th September into the 'havene' of Holyhead in North Wales, and plundered him of his goods and chattels to the value of 30*l.* sterling, and carried off the 'ship James' by water to Scotland, while he was on shore in his boat for a short time. He prays for an enquiry by merchants and mariners whether he was robbed within the harbour for 'defaute' of succour, or outside? If the latter, he has no claim. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 4.]

Oct. 17.

452. The K. sends the Archbishop of Canterbury, John de Sandale

EDWARD II. 1315. the chancellor, and Sir Walter de Norwich the treasurer, letters from the Warden of Berwick-on-Tweed and the Chamberlain of Scotland, commanding their instant attention to these. Conyngton.

(1st enclosure) The Chamberlain informs the K. that the provisions, wine, &c., which the sheriff of Lincoln shewed him at Boston on 20th July ready for shipment to Berwick, and promised to send instantly to the amount of 300*l.* or 400*l.*, have never appeared. The town is in great straits, and many dying from hunger. If the mayor and himself had not promised them food and clothing for the winter, the garrison would have gone. Begs the K. urgently to enable this pledge to be kept. Written at Berwick 3rd October.

(2nd enclosure) The Warden writes that the town and inhabitants never were in such distress, and will be this winter, 'if God and the K. don't think more of them,' and quickly. For if money and provisions do not arrive before All Saints, they will give up their posts and leave the town to a man. Reminds the K. that when he gave him the charge, he promised to supply him with money and victuals, and if they don't come by the above day he must give up, and remain as a simple bachelor; for he cannot hold the chief post without supplies. Berwick, 5th October. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 5.]

Oct. 18. 453. The K. to the Earl of Pembroke. Signifies that he has appointed Sir Henry de Beaumont to keep the Scottish March this next winter. Is returning to York where he was lately. Huntingdon, 18th October 9th year. [Sir F. Palgrave's Transcripts, 63, p. 63.]

Oct. 24. 454. The K. to the Treasurer and Barons of Exchequer. Having on 28th July 1314 committed the manor of Aylesham to Richard Lovel till he repaid himself from its issues 196*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*, which the K. was owing him for the pay of his knights and esquires and horses lost in the Scottish war, till 4th June 1314, and as on 8th October thereafter he granted that manor inter alia to David de Strabolgy earl of Athol, he commands them to reckon with Richard for his possession, and settle the balance if any due at Exchequer. Staunford. [Close, 9 Edw. II. m. 23.]

Oct. 30. 455. Indenture attesting that John de Weston chamberlain of the K. in Scotland received at Berwick-on-Tweed, on 30th October 9th year, from Sir John de Neville sheriff of Lincoln, by the hands of Robert Swan master of 'La Prest' of Spalding, for the garrison of Berwick, 16 qrs. malt barley heaped English measure, and 99 qrs. beans same measure. The seal of office of the Chamberlain of Scotland appended. [No seal.]

(Attached) is a letter, dated 3rd November, from the Chamberlain to the sheriff of Lincoln, telling him that the master had thrown overboard great part of his cargo of corn to escape the enemy; asking him to replace it as soon as possible, and not to send malt by

EDWARD II. —— 1315. level measure, as no one will have it. To send the stocfish, wax, and spicery, as promised, also 300 bords of 'Estland,' 300 bords of 'firre,' and a 'fothre' of lead. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{36}{2}$.]

Nov. 8. 456. The K. commands John de Sandale the chancellor, to issue assignments in favour of Sir Andrew de Harcla of any wards falling in the K.'s hands, to the amount of 1000 marks, as 'geredoun' for making prisoners John de Morreve and Robert Barde, Scotsmen, that he may be paid the sum within eight years. Clipston. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 6.]

Nov. 26. 457. The K. signifies to Master John de Westone chamberlain of Scotland, that he has sent him 300*l.* by his servant Andrew de Wyndesor, to be divided among the men in his pay there, at the sight of Simon Warde, according to their necessities. Teste the Treasurer, W. de Norwich. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 8 Edw. II. m. 213.]

[Extract.]

Circa Dec. 6. 458. Names of knights (3) and 36 esquires, &c., dispatched by the K. from Clipston under the late Sir William de Montacute, to rescue the Lady de Clifford, ravished by John le Irreys at Bernard castle, from 12th November till 6th December 1315, when they returned to the K.

On 28th November the sheriff of Carlisle, with 20 men-at-arms, brought John de Moray and Robert Barde, prisoners, and left next morning, leaving them under charge of Sir William—all at the K.'s charges. Attested by William de Montacute the son. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 19 Edw. II. m. 158, schedule.]

Amount allowed in the son's compotus as sheriff of Somerset and Dorset soon after 11th December 1326. [ib. m. 159.]

Dec. 7. 459. The K. for the encouragement of those who harass the Scottish rebels, grants Thomas de Fissheburne junior, all the plunder he and his force may gain from the enemy, and the ransom of any prisoners, being allowed 100 marks for any one of the latter whom the K. wishes to have. Clipstone. [Patent, 9 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 14.]

Dec. 16. 460. The K., grants to Anthony de Lucy all the plunder he gains from the Scots, and the ransom of any prisoners he makes; being bound to deliver up any one to the K. for 100 marks. Likewise all the issues he can levy from the K.'s own lands, and those of the late John Comyn, in Tynedale, and others there, occupied by the enemy. Doncaster. [Patent, 9 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 13.]

Dec. 23. 461. Inquisition [in virtue of writ tested Kyngesclipston 23d November previous, commanding an amended inquiry into the lands and fishings of Alexander de Badeby, John de Cheseholm, and

EDWARD II. Robert de Paxtone, enemies and rebels, in Paxton and Tweed] made —— at Berwick-upon-Tweed on 23rd December in the K.'s 9th year, before 1315. John de Weston chamberlain of Scotland, present sheriff of said town, in propria persona, by John Spark, John of Barton, Henry of Skremerston, Elyas of Newcastle, Thomas Harcars, Richard Cullersagh, Henry of the Castle, Richard of Coldyngham, Henry of Cnapton, Adam of Glagou, Hugh Stinaw, Nicholas of Huntyngdon, Robert of Huntlawe, John Bulle, William Ruffus, Philip Vulpus, Henry Colle, Adam son of Stobbes, Robert Gley, Hugh Curry, William son of Henry, Robert Schandy, William Palmer, and Robert Alde, jurors, who say that Alexander de Badeby has no lands in Paxton or fishings in Tweed. That John de Cheseholm had in the vill of Paxton a chief messuage, worth in time of peace with curtilage, &c., 6*s.* 8*d.*, now waste and ruined; also 4 acres of arable land, each worth with common pasture 12*d.*, now waste; also 5 bondages, each of 15 acres and worth 7*s.* each, now waste and ruined; also 2 'gresmanna,' holding common pasture in the vill, each worth 3*s.* 6*d.*, now waste; also 2 cottages each worth 2*s.* 6d., now waste. Anabilla Ayre held of him in heritage 5 acres in free farm, paying 3*d.* yearly. He also held in Tweed a net in the fishing called 'Brade,' a pertinent of Paxton, worth yearly 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, but now only worth 4*l.* by hindrance of the enemy; another in the fishing called 'Orrede,' worth 53*s.* 4*d.* yearly, now only 26*s.* 8d., from aforesaid cause; another in the fishing of 'Streme,' worth 66*s.* 8*d.*, now only 20*s.* from same cause; also one in the fishing called 'Bulshote,' worth 13*s.* 4*d.*, now nothing, for same cause. Total rents of land in peace time, 6*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* Total of fishings in peace time, 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; at present, 6*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Whereof Mariota Franceys has the third as dower, now or in peace time. That Robert de Paxton has in the same vill a chief mesuage built (edificatum), worth in time of peace 13*s.* 4*d.*, now waste and ruined; also in demesne 80 arable acres, each worth 12*d.*, now waste; also 52½ acres, each worth 6*d.*, now waste; also 5 bondages, each of 15 acres, and worth 7s., now waste; 2 'gresmanna,' each worth 3*s.* 6*d.*, now waste; 2 cottages worth 2*s.* 6*d.* each, now waste. Anabilla Ayre held heritably of him 5 acres, paying free rent of 3*d.* She is at the K.'s peace. He held in the fishing of 'Orrede' in Tweed, a net worth 53*s.* 4*d.*, now only 26*s.* 8*d.* by hindrance of the enemy; another in the fishing of 'Streme,' worth 66*s.* 8*d.*, now only 20*s.* from same cause; and another in the 'Bulshote,' worth 13*s.* 4*d.*, now nothing from said cause. Adam de Kyrkeby and Lucia his wife hold half a net of his heritage in the 'Brade' fishing, worth 66*s.* 8*d.*, now nothing, for same reason. They hold in frank marriage by gift of the late William de Paxton, Robert's grandfather, and are at the K.'s peace in England. On Lucia's death this net will revert to Robert and his heirs. Robert de Wyndegates, who is at the K.'s peace in England, holds half a net of Robert in the 'Brade' fishing, paying 8*d.* yearly.

EDWARD II. Total land rents in peace time, 8*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.*; of fishings at same time
—— 10*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.*; at present 4*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* [No seals.] [Inq. ad quod
1315. damnum, 9 Edw. II. No. 193.]

Dec. 28. 462. The K. commands the escheator citra Trent to allow Johanna Comyn of Buchan and her retinue to stay on the manor of Malton belonging to the late William de Vescy of Kildare, and pay her 50*l.* yearly from its issues. Clipstone. [Close, 9 Edw. II. m. 21.]

[1315.] 463. Complaint by the poor people of the ward of Bamburgh in Northumberland of the oppressions of the constable of the castle, who refuses to let them accept the truce offered by the Earl of Moray, Sir Robert de Brus's lieutenant, till Easter, for 270*l.*, unless they pay himself as much, which is beyond their power. And charges them exorbitant fees for leave to store their 'petitz biens' in the castle, and his porters and other servants extort money for letting them enter and go out. So they are between the enemy on one side and the constable on the other. Moreover, one 'Jack le Irys' and his fellows in the castle rob them of provisions without paying.

(Endorsed) The Council agree that a writ of 'oir and terminer' be issued to certain people above suspicion to decide as to these complaints. [Chancery Files, No. 132.]

Mutilated by damp.

[1315.] 464. John of Morpeth shews the K. and Council that he had houses within the walls of Carlisle worth 5 marks a year, and during the 12 days' siege, when the Scots attacked it night and day with 'berfrays' and other engines, Sir Andrew de Harcla, Sir Robert de Swyneburn, and the 'Commune,' knocked them down, and used the timber for 'berfrays' and 'bretages' to defend the town. He prays compensation. [No date.]

(Endorsed) Let there be enquiry made why the house was levelled, &c., and the K. will do reason. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 5594.]

1315–16. 465. The K. commands John de Segrave constable of Nottingham
Jan. 18. castle, to deliver John de Morref and Robert Barde, two Scottish prisoners there, to the sheriff, to be conducted to the castle of Sumerton. Clipstone. [Close, 9 Edw. II. m. 20.]

Feb. 9. 466. The K. commands the sub-collectors of the Papal tithe imposed by the late Clement V. in the province of York, to supersede levying it on the Prior and convent of Hexham till Michaelmas next, as their goods and chattels have been much wasted by the hostile incursions of the Scottish rebels. Lincoln. [Close, 9 Edw. II. m. 18.]

Feb. 9. 467. The K. orders the Barons to allow the Mayor and bailiffs of Lincoln, in their farm, the cost of equipping and dispatching 40 crossbowmen from the city and county to reinforce the garrison of

EDWARD II. Berwick-on-Tweed, which the civic authorities complain they delay —— to do. Lincoln. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 9 Edw. II. m. 54, dorso.] 1315–16.

Feb. 12. 468. The K. lately pardoned Thomas de Veer for marrying Agnes widow of Pagan Tybetot without licence, provided that he maintained at his own cost 20 men-at-arms for the defence of Carlisle against the Scots from the day of St Peter ad vincula last year till All Saints' following. Ralph Fitz William warden of Carlisle, attests the performance of said service, and the K. discharges Thomas. Lincoln. [Patent, 9 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 7.]

[1315–16.] 469. [Letters regarding the expedition of Edward de Brus to
Feb. 15. Ireland.]

John de Hothum to the K. Tells him that after Sir Roger de Mortymer left Ireland the justiciar and council and himself summoned the great lords to oppose the Scots, who, with their allies puffed up with pride, were doing all damage as they pleased. Sir John and Sir Morice le fiz Thomas, Sir Thomas le fiz Johan, Sir John le Poair baron of Donoil, Sir Arnaud le Poer, Sir Moritz Rocheford, Sir Miles de la Roche, and Sir David de Roche 'baneretz,' joined the justiciar, with a strong force of men-at-arms, 'hobelorars,' and 'pitaille,' and had an affair with the enemy 'en dur champ' between Kildare and Tristledormet, near a town called Arscoll, Monday before 'Chandelour,' but by bad luck the enemy kept the field, losing however some of their good people, while the K.'s forces lost only one, thanks to God. He says as soon as he hears news he will take counsel with these lords and Sir Richard de Clare, who was not at the battle, and protect the K.'s honour. The enemy have betaken them to fortalices among the Irish in [Leyss'] Leinster, where horsemen cannot attack them. But some have been made prisoners, about Trestledormet, and sent to Dublin by Sir Morice le fiz Thomas and Sir Morice de Rocheford. [Remainder damaged and defaced.] Dublin, 15th February.

[Other letters from these lords and his clerk on the same business.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Circa 470. [Petitions stating the sufferings and losses of the garrison of
Feb. 18. Berwick.]

(1) Morice de Berkeley, John de Weston, Randolf de Holm, and the garrison, send John de Rigeton to the K. to say that they are almost starved and many dead and maimed, as the bearer will relate, and beg speedy relief. [No date.]

(2) Another [anonymous] says that on St Valentine's day great part of the garrison made a foray to within two leagues of Melros Abbey. No knight was with them, and the warden ordered them not to go out, but they replied they had nothing to eat, and it was better to die fighting than starve. They took many prisoners and

EDWARD II. [1315–16.] cattle, but were discomfited on their return, and lost 20 men-at-arms and 60 foot, killed or prisoners; among these Arnaut de Poillant, Pierres de Logar, Remon Caillau, Hugh de Holand, John du Char; whether alive or dead they know not. Beg speedy relief, or the town will be lost by famine. Since the writer and Sir Bonafous left him they have had no pay, and beg him to take pity, as their term ended at Candlemas. [No date.]

(3) Another [also anonymous] relates the same foray to Melros, and that the leaders of the Scots were Sir James Douglas, Sir William de Soulis, and Sir Henry de Balliol. In returning they were sharply attacked at a ford, eight leagues from Berwick, and, besides losing many of their number, as the warden and chamberlain have told him, lost the most of their horses and all the provisions. Pray him to send supplies or they must surrender.

(4) Morice de Berkeley to Sir William Ingge. Tells him no town was ever in such distress as Berwick, short of being taken or surrendered. The garrison are deserting daily, and there are none left in the town, save only such of the garrison of the castle as are not slain or dead of hunger. If the town is lost, the blame will rest on him as one of the K.'s chief councillors. Whenever a horse dies in the town the men-at-arms carry off the flesh, and boil and eat it, not letting the foot touch it till they have had what they will. Pity to see Christians leading such a life. If he would save the town, prays him to send assistance quickly. Berwick, 18th February. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Trace of seal, red wax, endorsed.

1315–16. Feb. 20. 471. The K. writes to H[aco] king of Norway for redress on behalf of certain of his burgesses of Berwick-on-Tweed, whose vessel, freighted with goods from Flanders to the value of 527*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*, had been driven by stress of weather into his port of Wyke, and there arrested by the Norwegian bailiffs. Lincoln. [Close, 9 Edw. II. m. 17, dorso.]

Circa Feb. 22. 472. Petition by William de Bevercotes, late chancellor of Scotland, for payment of the balance of his arrears of fee at 200 marks per annum, for which he has a writ of Liberate on the Treasury, dated Lincoln, 22nd February 9th year, for 478*l.* 2*s.* 8¾*d.* [maille et ferlyng], per annexed transcript, but has only got 43*l.* as yet. (Transcript annexed.) [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Feb. 26. 473. The K. sends the Chancellor and Treasurer, by his vallet Rauf de Tarente, transcripts of letters from Ireland and Scotland, and letters to Sir William Inge, of the great misfortunes of his people at Berwick, and asks their advice with all despatch by Rauf, especially how he should answer the Irish letters; also to shew the copy to the Council and advise them accordingly. Clipston. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 1.]

EDWARD II. —— 1315–16. Feb. 26. 474. The K. commands John de Sandale the chancellor and Sir Walter de Norwys the treasurer to look into, and carefully order to the best of their judgment, the matters which Sir Henry de Beaumont will shew them as to his 'parlances' with some of the Scots for a truce, that he may return as soon as possible to his post. Clipston. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 1.]

March 2. 475. Warrant to the Chancellor to issue a safe conduct for a year for John Blithehait master of Dovenald de Mar's vessel 'La Blithe' of Newehethe, trading throughout the kingdom with good and honest merchandise, providing she does not deal with the Scottish enemy, or the Flemings, the enemy of France. Clipston. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 1; Patent, 9 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 32.]

March 14. 476. The K. commands the Chancellor to issue a commission in favour of Sir John de Castre of the same date as that appointing him warden of the castle and town of Carlisle, as he has been empowered to receive to the K.'s peace those people of Cumberland who have joined the Scots. Suleby. [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 1.]

March 17. 477. The K. sends the Chancellor and Treasurer a letter from Sir Moryz de Berkele warden of Berwick-on-Tweed, relating the sad misfortunes of some of the household in garrison there, and of the community, from the scarcity of provisions, and orders them to devise speedy succour and remedy. Hamslape.

[The enclosure from Sir Moryz, dated 2nd March, refers to the deaths of Erman de Poyluaud, Peres Lugar', and Reymound Cailough, who, with others of the K.'s sergeants-at-arms, had made a sally against his orders, as he had formerly reported. The burghers are deep in debt, and his men are dying of hunger 'par hees' on the walls. He has supplied them out of his own means while he had any. The town was never in such a state, as he has often told the K.; but he sees clearly that no order of the latter is obeyed. Whatever his ministers may say to the contrary, there has not come to Berwick, either in money or provisions, since he arrived there, more than 4000*l.*, and there are 10 weeks short of the year. Of the 300 men-at-arms enrolled, only 50. can be mustered mounted and armed, the rest of the horses being dead, and the arms at pledge for the owner's sustenance. He has not had a penny of his own pay since Michaelmas. Begs him to take thought for them and the town, for if he loses it, he will lose all the north, and they their lives. Begs another warden may be appointed, as his term expires a month after Easter, and he will remain no longer. Thinks no attention has been paid to his former letters.] [Privy Seals (Tower), 9 Edw. II. File 2.]

March 17. 478. Due at Berwick-on-Tweed to Sir Ivo de Aldeburgh knight, for the munition of the castle of Roxburgh, for arrears of pay of himself and garrison, and loss of horses in the late K.'s time, and victuals

EDWARD II. bought for the present K.'s garrison there, 376*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, as attested by —— the seal of the Chamberlain of Scotland John de Westone. Berwick.
1315–16. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

1315–1315–16. May 2–March 20. 479. Compotus of Nicholas Goldyng and Hugh de Castro Knok, purveyors appointed to buy provisions at Dublin to send to Skymburness for the Scottish war, and afterwards ordered by Edmond le Botiller justiciar of Ireland, and the Council, in consequence of the arrival of Edward de Brus and a great power of Scottish felons in Ireland, to apply these for the castles of Dublin, Carrickfergus, Northburgh, and the town of Dundalk, and the pay and expenses of John de Ergadia admiral of the fleet, and his forces on the sea-coast of Ulster, from 2nd May 8th year (1315) till 20th March 9th year (1315–16).

[Extracts.]

May 1. 484. The K. in implement of the indenture with Maurice de Berkeley, his warden of Berwick-on-Tweed, who undertook the same of goodwill, orders that he be paid 600*l.* from the first wards and marriages falling to the K. from Michaelmas last, and that over and above the 1000*l.* he draws for his office; and this for the very special diligence he has shewn in securing the safety of said town. Westminster. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 9 Edw. II. m. 40.]

He had not got the 600*l.* on 16th February following, when, on his complaint as late warden of Berwick, another writ is issued to the Barons to see him paid. Clarendon. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 10 Edw. II. m. 29.]

May 1. 485. Acknowledgment by John le Brewere of London and Ravensere, that he has delivered to Sir Richard de Lue the K.'s clerk, to be used as his own chattel, a letter under the seal of the Chamberlain of Scotland, to the granter, for 27*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* due him for victuals taken from him at Dundee in Scotland for the garrison there. London, St Philip & St James day, 9th year. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 9 Edw. II. m. 75, dorso.] [1316.] 486. The Mayor, bailiffs, and community of Berwick to the K.

May 10. Tell him that the town is in great danger, as there are only provisions for one month. The enemy's cruisers cut off their supplies, and last Thursday captured two vessels with victuals, the crews barely escaping with their lives. The Warden tells them his term of office has expired, but he remains at the K.'s wish till Pentecost next, but no longer. Beg a successor and succours without delay. Sir Robert de Bruys will be at Melros before Ascension Day with all his force, and do his utmost, they fear, to annoy them by treason or otherwise. Sir Richard Marmaduk has been 3 weeks in the town, and as yet has had no speech with the enemy, but tells them he will do what he can despite treason and envy. Ask credence for the bearer. 10th of May. [Royal Letters, No. 4354.]

1316. 487. The K. on their petition, allows Robert Barde and John de

[1316.] Ante Nov. 23. 514. Petition of Andrew de Harcla, a prisoner with the Scots, that the K. would grant him John de Moray and Robert Bard, whom he and his people took at Carlisle, in aid of his ransom, as he does not see how to deliver himself otherwise. [No date.]

His vallet John de Beauchamp will relate how he was taken prisoner. The castle is safe, as there are in the town Sirs Robert de Leyburne, Richard de Kirkbride, Symon de Lindseye, Thomas de Torthorald, [5 other knights], and 80 men-at-arms; and in the castle, Sir James de Harcla, Richard de Hoddelstone, Patrick de Culwenne, John de Harcla, and 50 men-at-arms. They are victualled for six months, but require money for their pay. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1316.] Ante Nov. 23. 515. [Petitions by Sir Andrew de Harcla's friends.] [Extracts.]

(1) They beg the K. to give them John de Morrewe to exchange for Sir Andrew, a prisoner with the Scots; and if so, will release the K. of 1000 marks he gave to Sir Andrew.

(2) As the K. has given the keeping of the castle and town of Carlisle to Sir John de Castre, who bears ill will to Sir Andrew, they beg the K. to order Sir John to give up the victuals and other property of Sir Andrew in the castle, intact to them.

(3) They beg the K. to hasten Sir Andrew's deliverance, that he may appear to answer the malicious charges made by some persons against him at Court. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

1316. Nov. 23. 516. As the K. owes Andrew de Hartcla, 582*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* for his own and his men's pay lately in garrison at Carlisle, and loss of horses between 27th June and 23rd October 1315, and the said Andrew also owes the Scots for his ransom a considerable sum before the instant Christmas, he commands the collectors of the 16th in the North Riding of York to pay him 82*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* Cawood. That he joined the Scots on Monday next after St Laurence's day 8th year [12th August 1314], and still

EDWARD II. 1316. adheres to them. The lands were worth 10*l.* in time of peace, and at present niehil, and are in the K.'s hand. He held no others in the county. [Seals lost.] [Inq. p. m. 10 Edw. II. No. 11.]

Dec. 9. 518. The K. for his good service grants to David de Langeton for life the manor of Manilawes in Northumberland, forfeited by the rebellion of John Wyschard, who has joined the Scots. Clipston. [Patent, 10 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 4.]

Dec. 16. 519. Indenture between the K. and Sir Antoyne Pessaigne, knight of Genoa, whereby the latter undertakes to furnish 17,000 qrs. wheat flour, 2600 tuns of wine, [and other provisions detailed,] for the Scottish war, to be delivered at his own risk and in certain proportions at Berwick, Newcastle, and Skynburness; also 5 galleys well found, each equipped with 200 men armed in plate, to be landed in Dublin for the war in Ireland about the quinzaine of St John Baptist next, ready for service. Westminster. [Patent, 10 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 36.]

Dec. 20. 520. The K. permits David earl of Athol to keep all the plunder he can gain from the Scots, or ransoms of prisoners; being bound to deliver any prisoner to the K. on payment of 100 marks. Clipstone. [Patent, 10 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 36.]

Fœdera, ii. 304.

[1316.] 521. Petition by Donekan de Makoury bachelor of Sir John de Ergeyl, who had served the K. and his father throughout the Scottish war, in which he lost his own father and his kindred, and had his lands destroyed by the Scots, against whom he has served this whole year in Man, praying for a grant of the ward of Nicholas de Ledewyche's lands in Ireland, with 20 marks yearly, and the marriage of his widow, so that he may maintain his wife and children till the latter are fit for the K.'s service. [No date.]

(Endorsed) The Treasurer and Barons of the Dublin Exchequer to inquire and certify the K. on the facts stated. [Chancery Files, No. 132.]

[1316.] 522. Petition to the K. and council by Randolf de Benton, who had been accused of using false measures, taking bribes, and delivering bad provisions to the garrison of Berwick from the stores under his charge, on which a commission of inquiry had been held by Sir Morice de Berkeleye warden, and Sir Stephen le Blunde, who had packed it, and threatened him so that he dared not speak in his defence for fear of being slain. Wherefore he prays the same may be quashed, and another taken before the K. on his arrival in these parts. [No date.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{3}{5}\frac{6}{}$.]

[1316.] 523. Petition from Sir William Comyn, one of the K.'s tenants in Leynster, shewing how the K.'s lands there lie waste, in the hands of felons and Irish; and praying, in recompense of his services and loss

EDWARD II. of chargers fighting with the Irish and Scots, that he would grant him
—— the lands in the attached ' escrowete.' [No date.]

[1316.] (Endorsed) The K. wishes further information, and then will do his pleasure.

(Scroll sewn to above) Memorandum for Sir William Comyn knight, viz., Baladlyc, 1 carucate; Balymalissy, 40 acres; Corbaly and Cloghan, 2 carucates; Stananewy, 220 acres with a water mill, [and seven other parcels of land named]; in all 11 carucates 12 acres. [Parliamentary Petitions, Nos. 1617, 1618.]

[1316.] 524. Petitions to the K. and Council by the Prior of Carlisle.

(1) That he may have allowance in his debt at Exchequer of 86*l.* 4*s.*, value of 25 sacks of wool and 26 pigs taken by Sir Harsculf de Cleseby for the late K.'s use, by tally, as his goods are sorely wasted by the Scots.

For the poverty and sufferings of his house, warrants for due allowance hinc inde.

(2) Also for 18½ qrs. of oats taken in the K.'s 3rd year by Sir Alexander Bastenthwayt, then sheriff of Cumberland, and Beneyt of Papecastre his bailiff, from the Prior's manor of Crosseby in Allerdale for the garrison of Dumfries castle, without payment or tally.

As it was so taken, let him sue them in Exchequer.

(3) As Sir Andrew de Harcla sheriff of Cumberland made a ' fosse ' through the Prior's ground under the wall of Carlisle to strengthen the town, and he dare not level it for the sheriff, he prays remedy lest his church lose the ground.

As it was raised for safety of the priory as well as the town, he must wait for peace, and the K. will see to his interest.

(4) As the said sheriff, on the approach of the enemy, set fire to and burned all the priory houses outside the walls, viz., their 'taunerie, turyn e molyns, and autre mesons necessaries,' which could not be replaced for 100*l.*, he prays remedy.

Let him wait ut supra. [m. 1.]

(5) Also, when he sent to Bernard castle to buy 10 qrs. 5 ' strikes ' of wheat for the support of the convent, John de Carleton, then sheriff of Westmorland, and John de Holand and William de la Proye his servants, took from his people on the road to Carlisle, 9 qrs. and 5 ' strikes ' for Appelby castle, and John de Hoby took 7 ' strikes ' for Broweham castle, for which they gave neither tally nor payment, to his heavy disappointment, and asks grace.

Let him sue a venire facias at Exchequer. [m. 2.]

(6) Likewise, when Sir Henry de Percy and Sir Robert de Clyfford, in the late K.'s 25th year, were appointed wardens of the March, and made a ' chavanche ' in Galloway on Robert le Brus, who yielded to their superior force and came with them to the K.'s peace at Carlisle,

EDWARD II. [1316.] they took for their expenses 252*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* of the fifth penny of the clergy for the defence of the realm, then in the Prior's hands, giving him an acquittance to keep him right with the K., and he asks allowance.

Let him have it, on shewing this acquittance, at Exchequer. [m. 3.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

All detached, but in same handwriting.

[1316.] 525. Petition by Huwe Gray, shewing the K. how he served his father and himself in all their Scots wars as 'vallet darmes.' Was thrice made prisoner, and lost every year during the war the profits of his 20*l.* land in Northumberland. His wife and children were captured at the taking of Berwick, and he had to ransom them and his goods. Has nothing left unless helped, and prays the K. to pay him 17*l.*, for which he holds a 'bille' under the seal of the Chamberlain of Scotland. [No date.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Ancient Miscellanea (Misc.), No. 939.]

[1308–16.] 526. Petition to the K. by the Prior and convent of Our Lady of Carlisle, asking a grant of timber for their church, which is burned, and also a confirmation of the church of Sourby, which his father the late K. Edward gave them. [No date. No endorsement.] [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 1592.]

[1316.] 527. Petition by Rauf de Neville to the K., shewing that Sir Robert de Neville his brother was killed by the Scots, who also took his brothers Sir Alexander de Neville and John de Neville, and himself, prisoners on the same day, keeping his brothers till they pay heavy ransom. That he himself is held to ransom for 2000 marks, and has given hostages till it is paid, or he re-enters his person. He begs the K. to aid him by giving him some ward or marriage which he may sell towards his ransom. Also that he would permit Sir Randolf de Neville his father, whose heir he is, to enfeoff him in his manor of Houton in Norfolk in aid of his ransom and support, for the said Sir Randolf is so impoverished by ransoms paid for his sons, that he has no means of helping the petitioner but by giving him land. [No date.]

(Endorsed) The K. wishes advice hereon. The K. has granted leave of feoffment. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 6198.]

Circa [1316.] 528. Petition to the K. by Richard de Kirkebride, for a grant of the lands of Sir Walter de Corri, the K.'s enemy, in Kirklevington and Kirkeandres, worth 20 marks, as Sir Robert Brus granted all the petitioner's lands of the same 'parcennerie,' both in England and Scotland, to Sir Walter when he knighted him at the siege of Carlisle. He prays the K. to have regard to his losses, maimings, and other sufferings, from day to day in his service. [No date.]

EDWARD II. (Endorsed) Inquiry to be made as to their value and the holder, —— and the K. will do his pleasure. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 4583.]

[1315–16.] 529. Petition by the Abbot and convent of Holmcoltran to the K., shewing how they have been plundered and spoiled in the Scottish wars, and of late burned and wasted, their cattle driven, horses, oxen, and cows to the value of 500*l.* and more, themselves so impoverished that they cannot serve God without help, begging him to give them the advowson of the church of Burgh under Staynesmore in Westmerland in his patronage, in amendment of their poor condition. [No date.]

(Endorsed). The K. understands that Sir Robert de Clifford claimed it, and, his heir being under age and in the K.'s ward, nothing can be done till after his majority. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 3946.]

Circa [1316.] 530. Richard Lovel his vallet, prays the K. to command the Warden of Scotland to give him seisin of the lands which were Sir John de Soules' in the county of Donfres, which the K. gave the petitioner by charter. [No date.]

(Endorsed). The Lieutenant and Chamberlain ordered to call and hear parties hinc inde, and do justice, &c. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 5238.]

Petition by the same as husband of the daughter and heir of Sir John de Soules, for the manor of Veil Rokebourk, which was Sir John's.

(Endorsed) The Lieutenant and Chamberlain to ascertain Sir John's title to the land, and certify the K. [ib. No. 5246.]

1316–17. June 4. 553. Pleas before the K.'s Council at Westminster in Trinity term, 10th year.

[Extract.]

Hugh de Hoghtone victualler of Berwick, present before the Council on 4th June, shewed them that, while John de Westone the chamberlain of Scotland reckoned the daily pay of the garrison there at 22*l.*, he (Hugh) would undertake to discharge it for 17*l.* daily; asserting that many absented themselves, some for one, some for three months, drawing the K.'s pay as if always on duty; many drew pay as crossbowmen who neither knew how, nor were able, to bend their bows; many, calling themselves men-at-arms, could neither arm themselves nor ride; many footmen who managed to buy horses worth 5 or 6 marks were paid as men-at-arms; knights put their grooms in the ranks, and drew pay for them as men-at-arms, and the K. could have little help from such at a pinch. The Chamberlain also paid burgesses and traders, staying in the town on their own business, as men-at-arms, and household servants of knights likewise, and simi. lar useless people, who were valueless in a siege, all to the K.'s loss and damage. The Chamberlain appeared and denied in toto, and offered to prove at the discretion of the Court. [fol. 1.]

EDWARD II. 1317. Sir Edmund Darel knight, and others of the garrison, also complained to the Council, on the morrow of Trinity, that the Chamberlain drew double pay for his retinue, starved the garrison, committed peculations in stores, and totally neglected the K.'s interest. The Chamberlain denied in toto, and both parties demanded an inquiry. [fol. 3.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea, No. $\frac{9}{28}\frac{0}{0}\frac{3}{3}$.]

Much faded and obliterated in parts.

On 24th November previous, a similar discharge to the Prioress and nuns of Marryk for 83*l.* 3*s.* 3½*d.* for like reasons. York. [m. 21, dorso.]

Dec. 8. 620. The K. commands that David de Bethune be paid the arrears of his fee of 20*l.* yearly at Exchequer till otherwise provided for. York. [Close, 12 Edw. II. m. 18.]

Dec. 12. 621. The K. considering a representation by the citizens of Carlisle, that on 5th March 1314–15, he committed to them their city, mills, fishings, &c., for three years from Easter thereafter, and Robert de Brus with his army besieged them from Monday next before the Feast of St Margaret Virgin [14th July] 1315, till Sunday next after the Feast of St Peter ad vincula [3rd August] following, destroying all their growing crops and other goods; and that all the city gates were closed with a wall of stone and lime from said Sunday till the Purification following, on account of the attacks of the enemy, whereby they could neither go in nor out, save only by a postern, and this but rarely in case of ambushes, and thus they got little good of the said mills, fishings, &c.; commands the Barons, in reckoning with them, to have consideration to these losses, &c., in their discretion. York. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 13 Edw. II. m. 6, dorso.]

EDWARD II. —— 1318. Dec. 20. 622. Letters patent by Sir Nicholas Scot knight, acknowledging receipt from Stephen le Blount keeper of the stores at Newcastle-on-Tyne, for the hire of his cellar and granary there, where the K.'s victual was stored in the 10th, 11th, and 12th years—of four casks of Gascon and a pipe of Spanish wine. Newcastle, 20th December 12th year. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{37}{1}$.]

Seal in green wax appended. A shield bearing a chevron charged with 5 mullets between 3 escallops (?) or covered cups (?) : '. . . . CHOL . . . .'

[1318.] 623. Petition to the K. and Council by David de Langetone and Thomas de Hetone, shewing that Roger Purvays, who was taken with two others in the 'piles' of Boltone and Wytingam, resisting the K., by the garrisons of Bamburgh, Alnewik, and Werkworde, is an open traitor, and one of the greatest evil-doers on the March, and begging that he may be hanged and drawn, and asking the K.'s pleasure in regard to the others. [No date.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Ancient Miscellanea (Miscellanea), Box 939.]

Circa [1318.] 624. Petition by Robert de Blakebourne to the K. and Council, shewing how he served him and his father in Berwick and the Scots war for 22 years and more, and was taken prisoner, 'wounded almost to death,' under Roger de Horsleie, when the castle was lost; and lost his brother and all his ten friends at the battle of Stirling, and the issues of all his lands on the March, worth 80 marks yearly; and had nothing to live on but 20*l.*, which he drew for a fishing in Tweed till that town was lost, and has now nothing left to sustain himself; and praying for some aid, in respect of these long services and losses, till he can regain his lands. [No date.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Ancient Miscellanea (Miscellanea), Box 939.]

[1318.] 625. Another petition by the same to the K., adding that, at Sir Roger Horsley's request, after the town was taken, he crossed the Tweed from Berwick on horseback at great risk, with letters from the garrison to the K., taking with him 21 of their horses, which he brought safe to Newcastle. [No date.]

(Response) Let him say in what place, and the K. will consider.

He also prays reimbursement of his horses and the wages of himself and men, 100*l.*, as he is in such debt in London and elsewhere, he knows not where to turn.

The K. will speak with the Treasurer. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 921.]

[1318.] 626. Warrant to the Bishop of Ely the chancellor, to issue letters discharging . . . . the K.'s sergeant, who has care of the cart harness of his baggage horses and other things, and lost his rolls at the battle of Stirling in the 7th year, and can render no account, of his intromissions up till 24th June that year. [York (?)] [Privy Seals (Tower), 12 Edw. II. File 4.]

Mutilated.

EDWARD II. [1318.] 627. Marie widow of Sir Edmund Comyn, to the K. She says that, after her husband was killed at the battle of Stirling, she went to Scotland under the K.'s safe conduct, and in her absence Gilbert de Middelton raised war in Northumberland, destroying her possessions. Wherefore she remained in Scotland with a friend who supported her. Having bought some beasts and other things to live on, she prays the K. for a safe conduct to England with them, being in fear of her life where she is. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Much faded. Endorsement illegible.

[1307–18.] 628. Petition by John bishop of Carlisle, to the K., to be allowed 100*l.*, which he took from a fifth granted to the late K. by the clergy, (to be expended in defence of the Scottish March), and paid to Sir Thomas de Saunford marshal of Sir Henry Percy's army, when 'Willam Waleys' was before Carlisle, and burned the country for 30 leagues round; and there was no other warden within the castle and town than himself. For Sir Thomas and his men would have followed their lord Sir Henry, who was two days' march in advance in England, if he had not got the 100*l.* to remain for eight days, as is well known in the country. [No date.]

(Deliverance) To be shewn to the Treasurer. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 2135.]

[1318.] 629. William de Lasceles of Suthcoutone shews in Exchequer that he held 'une terre' there for a term of years from one Johan de Ressonet, a Scotsman, who has always been at the K.'s peace since this last war began. He has manured and put heavy costs out on it, and Richard Oysel escheator 'de la Trente,' has seized it, saying Johan is an enemy. Prays to have possession on mainprise till this is settled, for he has put his all into it, and if he loses it he is a beggar for life. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

1318–19. Jan. 10. 630. The K. to the Abbot and convent of Thornton-on-Humber. Commands them to deliver to J. bishop of Glasgow, or his attorney, the goods and chattels of Friar William abbot of Jeddeworth of that diocese, who lately died at their house, where he lived at the K.'s request. York. [Close, 12 Edw. II. m. 15.]

Jan. 26. 631. Warrant on the Treasury for John Belle, William Jetour, and others for 190 marks, balance of 200 granted to them for their late capture of John de Wymes and other Scottish rebels in a ship at Hertelpol, whom they delivered with their goods to the K.; viz., 50 marks for their expenses, and 150 for the prisoners and their goods. York. [Liberate, 12 Edw. II. m. 2.]

Feb. 28. 632. The K. grants to John de Athy for life, the manor of Glenarm in Ulster in Ireland, forfeited by the rebellion of Hugh Byset, who has joined the Scots. York. [Patent, 12 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 25.]

EDWARD II. 1318–19. March 14. 633. Inquisition [in virtue of writ, tested York, 8th December preceding] held at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Wednesday next after the Feast of St Gregory Pope, in the K.'s 12th year, before William de Denom and Richard de Emeldon, justices, by [12 jurors], who found that the late William de Heselrig was seised in the 4th part of the manor of Akild in Northumberland. That his son and heir John de Heselrig entered thereto at his father's death and was peaceably seised for 2 years, till Henry de Prendirgest unjustly disseised him and kept it till he was forfeited for joining the Scots, with whom he now is, when it was taken in the K.'s hand. That William de Heselrig acquired it by charter from Nicholas de Graham and Maria his wife, to him and his heirs, confirmed by John [de Graham] their son and heir. That the only right of Henry de Prendirgest therein was as alleged heir of his brother John de Prendirgest, who joined the Scots in the late K.'s reign, when it was forfeited to Nicholas and Maria, who gave it to the said William. That John de Heselrig was under age at his father's death. [No seals.] [Inq. ad quod damnum, 12 Edw. II. No. 82.]

March 19. Fœdera, ii. 389. 634. The K. grants to his son John of Eltham and his heirs all the lands citra Trent forfeited by Scotsmen or their adherents. York. [Patent, 12 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 18.]

Original writ in Chapter House 'Paper Documents,' No. 2036. No seal; red and green silk tags.

March 24. 635. Extent [in virtue of writ tested York, 27th November previous, on the petition of Thomas de Gray that, for his good service in Scotland, the K. would grant him 40 marks of the forfeited land of John Mautalent and his mother, rebels with the Scots] made at Newcastle-on-Tyne, 24th March in the K.'s 12th year, before the escheator, by [a jury of 12], who found that John Mautalent, before he joined the Scots enemies, held in the vill of Howyk juxta Alnewyk, 108 arable acres and 8 of meadow, worth 7*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* yearly; that Cristiana his mother held there, as dower, 6 husbandlands, worth 6*l.* yearly; that they are held of the lord of Alnewyk by service of the fifth of a knight's fee. That she held no dower in Chyvyntoune but the half of said vill of Sir Robert de Lumley, by service of half a mark yearly to the castle guard of Alnewyk; and the reversion is the K.'s by John's rebellion. It is worth in time of peace, 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* [Inq. ad quod damnum, 12 Edw. II. No. 64.]

March 24. 636. Writ in favour of Gilbert Makasky (who, while constable and keeper of the castle and Isle of Man, between 8th February and 1st May 1310–11, had expended various sums in the K.'s service on John of Argyll and others, under various royal mandates which he has lost in Scotland by the attacks of the enemy), allowing him, in consideration of his own good services in Man and on the Scottish Marches, the sum of 308*l.* 17*s.* 6½*d.*, received and so expended 24th

EDWARD II. March 12th year. York. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 12 Edw. II. m. 39.]

1319. Easter Term. 637. As Gilbert Makasky, late warden of Man, seeks allowance in his compotus for certain men-at-arms at 2*s.*, and foot at 3*d. per diem*, and the Barons are averse to allow the same in the Treasurer's absence, who is at the parliament at York, being above the usual rate of 12*d.* for men-at-arms and 2*d.* for foot, they adjourned the accounting to the quinzaine of Trinity. Before which day Gilbert died. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 12 Edw. II. m. 130.]

April 26. 638. Writ to the sheriff of Lancaster to obey as if it were the K. himself, Richard earl of Arundel, his lieutenant, sent to put down the Scots' invasion, and aid him with the array of his county when required by the Earl or his deputies. Westminster. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

May 22. 639. The advocate, echevins, consuls, and community of Ypres to the K. In reply to his letters complaining that arms and provisions have been supplied to Robert de Brus and the insurgent Scots by some of their townsmen, they assure him that although they have no authority to restrain them from trade, which is the prerogative of their Count, they will use their utmost endeavours to dissuade them from holding any communication with the Scots. Given in 1319, Tuesday after Ascension Day. [Royal Letters, No. 4220.]

[1319.] April–May. 640. Petition by John de Cusak to the K. Shews how his father Sir Walter de Cusak and himself served in Scotland and Ireland in his father's and his own time, and with 'le Mortimer' his lieutenant, at their own costs; and at Dundalk, where Sir Edward de Brus was killed, he had 60 men-at-arms, the best of his own surname and lineage; and his father Sir Walter and himself and their friends have been thrice burned and plundered by the Scots and the Lascys. Prays the first escheat of 100 marks of land.

(Endorsed) It seems to the Council he and his heirs should have 50 marks of forfeited land, especially as he was at the battle where Edward de Brus was killed. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 1651.]

June 1. 641. The K. grants to John de Cusak, in accordance with the foregoing recommendation, 50 marks land. York. [Patent, 12 Edw. II. p. 2, m. 8.]

June 6. 642. The K. commands Margaret de Ferendraght to pay Roger Comyn the 10 marks she owes the K. at Exchequer for the manor of Briggestoke at Easter last, having granted them to him for his good service. York. [Close, 12 Edw. II. m. 5.]

June 6. 643. The K. having granted Roger Comyn ut supra, commands the same to be allowed to Margery de Ferendraght on production of

EDWARD II. Roger's receipt. York. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 12 Edw. II. —— m. 54.]

[1319. October.] 668. Pay sheet of the K.'s army besieging Berwick. August and September.

[Summary.]

[The Earls of Pembroke and Angus were there in person, the former with 60 foot, and the latter with 32 hobelars. The Earls of Richmond and Arundel and Sir Thomas Wake were absent, but sent men—Arundel, 260; Richmond, 35; and Wake, 65. The county of York contributed 1740 men—from Ribbleschire, 100; Beverley, 100; York city, 95; Knaresburgh, 126; and Tickhill, 30, and other places. Barnard castle sent 157; Nottingham, 160; the late English garrison of Berwick, 20 crossbowmen and 120 archers; the garrison of Norham, 24 hobelars; Sir Robert de Welle, 40 hobelars, 20 archers; Sir Hugh de Louthre, 25 hobelars, 28 foot; Sir Anthony de Lucy, 73 hobelars; Sir Thomas Ughtred, 44; Sir John de Fennewyk, 20, and 20 archers; Sir Roger de Somerville, 29 hobelars. Sir Andrew de Harcla brought 980 foot and 360 hobelars. North and S. Wales sent 2400 foot in nearly equal proportions, the districts and leaders' names being given. Divers counties, 300 hobelars and 900 foot. The

EDWARD II. several totals amount to:—120 crossbowmen, 1520 archers, 3000 —— English foot, 2400 Welsh, and 1040 hobelars—in all, 8080 men.
[1319.] The total amount of pay, as summed up on the last membrane, is 3048*l.* 3*s.* The periods run from 1st August to 24th September, when the bulk of the forces were paid off.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Three membranes of unequal size written on both sides.

1319. Nov. 5. 669. Exemplification [of (1) an inspeximus charter to the priory of Durham by Edward I., dated Assherugge, 20th January 1290–91, confirming inter alia their lands in Lothian, as in the charter of K. John, dated Neuport, 2nd February 5th of his reign; and (2) a grant by Edward I. of 40*l.* yearly, from which they are to distribute, on the two feasts of St Cuthbert, 1*d.* each to 3000 poor; to provide two wax candles, each of 20 lbs., near the high altar before the shrine of the saint; two lesser ones before his banner; a perpetual priest to say mass in 'la Galilei,' and two candles there; with books and suitable ornaments for said priest,—and other purposes. Berwick-on-Tweed, 16th September 1296.] York. [Charter, 13 Edw. II. m. 6.]

Nov. 6. 670. The K., at the Bishop of Ely's request, pardons John son of Richard Scot, his offences in joining the Scots, as he brought back Geoffry le Ferrour the bishop's servant, lately made prisoner by the Scots in a skirmish in Yorkshire, safe to his master. York. [Patent, 13 Edw. II. m. 29.]

Nov. 6. 671. Grant to Dovenald de Mar, that he may remain more becomingly in the K.'s service, of the manor of Long Wynyngton in Lincolnshire, towards 160*l.* per annum. York. [Patent, 13 Edw. II. m. 29.]

Nov. 10. 672. The K. commands the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Dublin Exchequer to pay Sir Duugan MacGofferri 12*l.*, balance of the pay of himself and his men keeping the sea between Ireland and Scotland in the 12th year. York. [Close, 13 Edw. II. m 14.]

[Extract.]

[1319.] Nov. 14.] 673. Robert count of Flanders to the K. In answer to his complaint of John Crabbe's outrages, he will punish him on the wheel if he catches him, as he has been banished for murder. He knows nothing of the ships said to have sailed from his port of Swin with arms and provisions for the Scots, as he has forbidden this, and believes they must have gone to Scotland and Ireland merely to trade, which he cannot hinder. 'In capite Decembris.' Ghent. [Royal Letters, No. 4225.]

Circa [1319.] 674. Henri de Harcla clerk, complains to Exchequer that when he had sent his goods into Carlisle, to escape the enemy, under protec-

[No date.] [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. $\frac{41}{173}$.]

Circa Nov. [Complaints against Sir Andrew de Harcla and his brother John.]

675. The K.'s lieges [at Carlisle] complain that after the death of Gilbert de Brunlee the K.'s victualler there, John de Hartcla went to his clerk Nicholas de Brunley, who had the keys of the cellars, and said he had a claim of 200 marks and more for arrears of pay against Gilbert, but he would take victuals instead. The clerk refused without the K.'s warrant, whereon John broke through the wall of a 'lunge celer' in the priory of Carlisle and the doors of others, and took out 20 tuns of the 'elite' of the K.'s wine. He gave some to the Scots enemy, through Thomas le Clerk of Moffat (Moffea), one of the most 'privez' men with Robert de Bruys, who took them away by water, and some part he sold; all as well known to the canons, and others of the town and country.

(2) At the late commission of gaol delivery to Sir Rauf fitz William, Hugh de Louthere, and Robert de Barton, they found that the sheriff had kept back seven prisoners, all Englishmen, who had broken faith and joined the enemy. One of these, Adam de Greneheued, had killed a K.'s sergeant in Cumberland, was taken in Tindalle by Thomas son of Nicholle, and brought to Tesedalle, where the sheriff, Sir Andrew de Harcla, commanded Thomas in the K.'s name to send the traitor to be justified in the K.'s city. Thomas sent him, on condition that he got his ransom, if freed. The under-sheriff refused to bring these seven before the justices without the sheriff's or his brother John de Harcla's orders. Whereon the justices proclaimed before the country that they should not be delivered, on forfeiture of life and limb, without the K.'s command. But one day, while Rauf fitz William, being warden of the town and country, was in Inglewood taking the K.'s 'grese,' and had left his son Robert in charge with a simple 'mesne,' comes John de Harcla with a strong force of horse and foot to the castle, takes said Adam and another, one John Notehode, to the Solway water, ransomed Adam for 200 marks money told, and the other for 12 marks. The same night the two joined a band of 'schavaldurs,' and robbed and plundered in England to the value of their ransoms and more, and are still at work.

(3) When Sir Rauf, with advice of the best men of the country, such as Sir Antoigne de Lucy, Sir Richard de Kirkebride, and others, arranged forays on the enemy, he wrote to John de Harcla, as lieutenant of the sheriff, to muster the country array, when John by his bailiffs proclaimed loudly on the Marches and in churches that horse and foot should muster. But privily sent others of his 'schavaldurs' from vill to vill to keep them back, saying that Rauf's authority would soon be over; and himself went in person to Gillesiaunde and the barony of Liddel and warned them not to go with Sir Rauf, but stay at home till his brother or himself told them. Thus the enemy about Hermitage, where Rauf intended to foray, were all warned the day before his arrival, and removed their goods out of his reach.

(4) Whereas the March of Carlisle was well defended against the Scots unless they came in great force, before said John was constable of Carlisle castle, it is now so weakened by his false indictments, ransoms, &c., that the best and richest of the country about Gillesland and Lidell have gone over to the enemy, except people of no account,—more than 97 from the barony of Liddel alone, besides the rest of the county.

(5) Again, whereas Sir Richard de Kirkebride warden of 'lae paees' in Cumberland, commanded John de Harcla in the K.'s name to bring one Black Adekin, indicted of manslaughter and common trafficking with the Scots, for trial before him in the castle, he took him away out of the county towards Nicholle [Forest?].

(6) When Sir Rauf made inquest as to suspicious persons among the burgesses of Carlisle, and one John le Mareschal was warned from the town, John de Hartcla warranted him body for body as a good liegeman. This John Mareschal has now joined the Scots and done much mischief in the country. He and John de Prendregest surrendered the Pele of Lidell to them before deserting.

(7) A knight and others of Rauf's household having found one John Redewall and Nele the groom of John de Hartcla, with others, buying beasts at Solway Water, and other goods from the Scots, attached and brought them as prisoners with their goods to Carlisle. There John de Hartcla became surety for their answering the charge of trafficking when called on, and the result is that John Redewall has now joined the enemy. They pray that some loyal man in whom they can trust be appointed to inquire into these things.

(8) When said John was master forester of Inglewood, in the time of Sir Piers de Gavaston, then justice of the forest, he received more than 100*l.* of 'aprouementz,' and has never accounted for the money. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1318–19.] 676. Petition to the K. by John of Hesilrygg, who shews that he was at the capture of Sir Gilbert de Middelton, &c., in the castle of Mitteforth, and was also made prisoner at the 'descomfiture' of Stirling, where he lost horses and armour worth 200 marks,—

EDWARD II. —— [1318–19.] imprisoned for 2 years, ransomed at 200 marks, losing also the profits of his 40 mark land in Northumberland for five years, in all 600 marks, whereby he is brought very low. He prays for allowance of 480*l.* due to the K. by Eustauce de Burneby of the county of Norfolk (attermed at 4 marks yearly), that the same be recalled, and the whole debt paid at once to the petitioner. [No endorsement. No date.] [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 4316.]

1319. Dec. 1. Fœdera, ii. 409-10. 677. Commissions to J. bishop of Ely, chancellor, Aymar de Valence earl of Pembroke, Hugh le Despenser junior, and Bartholomew de Badlesmere to treat with Robert de Brus and the Scots for a peace, and swear to the observance of the same; to treat for a truce and swear to its observance, and to grant safe conducts to the Scots coming to Newcastle-on-Tyne or elsewhere to treat. York. [Patent, 13 Edw. II. m. 21.]

Dec. 1. 678. The K. exonerates William Pesshun (son and heir of the late Stephen Pesshun, a Scotsman and enemy), whose homage he took for the manor of Berughby on 17th June 1317, from a demand of 20 marks made as if he were heir or executor of the late John de Sandale, who had the custody of two-thirds while he was a minor. York. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 13 Edw. II. m. 14.]

Dec. 4. 679. The K. to his bailiffs of Ravenesferode. Signifies that he has released on mainprise the goods of certain merchants of Grippeswolde, Strallesound, and Lubeck, which he had commanded them to seize in satisfaction of the claims of Adam le Clerk of Lynn, whose ship, value 100*l.*, freighted with salt of Poitou, lampreys of Nantes, and bales of 'Bugge,' value 200*l.*, while on her voyage to Perth in aid of the garrison, had been captured off the coast of Norfolk and her crew slain, by evil-doers of these ports, her cargo sold at Aberdeen, and the hull carried off to Strallesounde, the echevins of which town had neglected to make redress. York. [Close, 13 Edw. II. m. 11.]

Dec. 8. 680. Warrant to pay Richard de Tang son of Master Andrew de Tang the K.'s notary, 50*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* due to his father for writing a process touching the realm of Scotland between the 25th November 1316 and 7th July 1318, that it may be applied to the ransom of his father, lately carried off to Scotland by the rebels. By the Council. York. [Liberate, 13 Edw. II. m. 3.]

Dec. 22. 681. [Fragment of] document [by Robert de Brus] declaring the conditions of the truce concluded between the Bishop of Ely chancellor, Aymer de Valence earl of Pembroke, ... and Bartholomew de Badelesmere steward of the household, on behalf of Edward II., and himself, for 2 years from St Thomas's day, referring to the surrender of Herbotel (?) castle before Michaelmas, the property of vessels that might chance to be wrecked on the Scottish coasts, and no new

EDWARD II. fortresses to be made within the sheriffdoms of Berwick, Roxburgh, —— or Dumfries. The Earl of Moray has sworn on the granter's soul to 1319. keep these conditions. Berwick-on-Tweed, 22nd December, 14th of his reign. [No seal.] [Royal Letters, No. 4340.]

[1314–19.] 682. Petition by Lucas de Barry vallet of the late K.'s household, to the K. Relates how he was 3 years under Sir John de St John in Lochmaben castle, under Sir John de Castre in Dunfries castle, and then in the 'Peel' of Linlithgow when besieged, twice made prisoner and heavily ransomed. And also, by the K.'s command, under Sir Robert de Clifford in 'Douueglas' castle, when Sir Robert de Brus and Sir James de Douglas attacked it, the year when the late K. died. Served the present K. in his Scottish wars till the battle of Stirling, where he was made prisoner and heavily ransomed. Whereby he has had to sell and lease his lands. Prays for some recompense for his long service. [No date.]

(Endorsed) Let him sue the Seneschal of the household and the K.'s confessor, shew his service and they will inform the K. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 901.]

[1319.] 683. The Burgomasters, echevins, and council of Bruges to the K. In answer to his letters requiring them to abstain from all countenance or aid to the Scottish rebels, they reply that the Count of Flanders has prohibited all intercourse between his subjects and those sea-robbers, who, in the guise of Scotsmen, commit many outrages; but they cannot prevent honest merchants of all countries coming to trade in Flanders, which is common to all. [No date.] [Royal Letters, No. 4232.]

1319. End of. 684. Letters patent by Alan of Argyll esquire of the K.'s household, acknowledging receipt from . . . . the keeper of the K.'s stores at Newcastle-on-Tyne, of victuals to the value of . . . ., arrears of wages of himself, his socius, 6 hobelars, and 2 . . . . of his retinue while staying there in custody of the Scottish March in the 12th year. 1322. 769. Grant to Alexander de Moubray and the heirs male of his Sept. 8. body lawfully begotten, of the manor of Boulton in Allerdale, Cumberland, escheated by Roger de Moubray, formerly the K.'s enemy and rebel. Neubyggyng. [Charter, 16 Edw. II. m. 6.]

Sept. 8. 770. The K. to the Bishop of Durham. Reminds him that he holds Norham castle in name of the Church of Durham, of himself. That he offered to his brother Henry de Beaumont and the Bishop's constable of Norham, to increase his garrison with a strong force of men-at-arms and victuals at his own cost, which they refuse. Wherefore commands him straitly, on pain of forfeiture of his barony and his own and his brother Henry's lands, to see the castle well garrisoned and provided, as he shall answer at his peril. And to reply distinctly by the bearer on receipt, what he will do. Neubygging, 8th September 16th year. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{38}{11}$.]

[1322.] 771. The K. to the Abbot of Bridelington. Thanks him warmly
Sept. 12. for the 2 carts and 8 horses provided for his expedition to Scotland, whence he has arrived to remain this winter in defence of the March. He returns them by the bearer, and informs the Abbot he will find him his most gracious lord when he has affairs at Court. New Castle-on-Tyne, September 12.

[1322.] Sept. 16. 776. Randekyn de la More, a Scottishman, has letters of safe conduct to come to Bamburgh to speak with Friar John de Bynbroke of the Order of St John of Jerusalem, on business of the Order, for a month. Newcastle-on-Tyne, September 16. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{38}{11}$.]

Sept. 17. 777. The K. to Sir Thomas de Grei constable of Norham castle. Hears that he is besieged by the Scots, and trusts to his great loyalty to hold it. Sends by his 'compaigne' part of the money to pay his garrison. Remains at Newcastle in peace collecting his forces, and hopes, with God's aid, to put the enemy down. Prays him especially to send reports of the Scots 'from day to day' and 'from time to time' with his counsel how to act. To keep a good front to them, and to assure the people around the castle that their losses in crops and goods will be made up to them. Newcastle-on-Tyne, September 17. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{38}{11}$.]
Much defaced in parts.

Sept. 17. 778. The K. to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Tells him he is in good health, and has just returned from his expedition to Scotland as far as Edinburgh on the Scottish sea. Having taken the road on the sea coast to do more damage, he found neither 'man nor beast,' and will winter on the March for its safety. Thanks him for his letters and his diligence in raising his people to oppose 'these evil Flemings.' As soon as he hears of them he will send his navy to

Sept. 26. 782. The K. commands the keepers of his Great seal to issue letters in favour of Alianora wife of Sir Richard de Waleys knight, for her dower lands as widow of Robert de Bruys, which were seized with Sir Richard's other lands for his rebellion, but have been restored to her by the K.'s grace. Durham. [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 6.]

NEWCASTLE ... LIBRARY NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE

[1322.] Sept. 26. 783. The K. to Roger de Horslee constable of Bamburgh castle. Tells him, as he must well know, that the Scots with a small force have entered the March, and, after infesting the neighbourhood of the castles near him, doing mischief, and, what is worse, taking ransoms and hostages from his subjects, have got away without challenge or damage from the garrisons, to the constable's dishonour and shame, as he had a stronger force, and should have secured the safety of the March, which the K. has spent so much in strengthening. He has had sure intelligence from Sir Thomas de Grey constable of Norham castle, that at the place where the enemy are entrenched near that castle, there are not more than 100 men-at-arms and 100 hobelours, and in the town of Berwick there are only 40 men-at-arms and the burgesses. He is astonished that among them they have not proper scouts and espial, and delay to harass the enemy. Wherefore he commands him on his allegiance to see and do better, and in concert with the other garrisons to send out spies and do some exploit on the enemy, and also be ready to join the K. forthwith on his summons. Durham, September 26.

EDWARD II. —— [1322.] Similar to Ralph de Neville constable of Werkworth castle, John de Lilleburne and Roger Mauduyt, constables of Dunstanburgh castle, and Henry de Percy and his lieutenant in Alnwick castle. [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{38}{11}$.]

[1322. Sept.] 786. The K. to the Chancellor. For the good service of Sir Alexander de Moubray, he has given him and the heirs male of his body the manor of Boulton in Allerdale, in the county of Cumberland, an escheat by forfeiture of Roger de Moubray a rebel, to be held of the chief lord of the fee, and to revert to the K. failing such heirs. [No place.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{38}{11}$.]

A draft.

[1322. Sept.] 787. The K. to Sir Thomas de Grey constable of Norham castle. Thanks him for his letters sent by Robert de Oggel and the present bearer, and his good services. Commands him to be vigilant, as he has sent the Queen to stay at Tynemouth, while he himself is going through the country collecting force to keep down the enemy. The garrisons in the castles of the East March have been charged to aid him if necessary. [No place or date.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{38}{11}$.]

1322. Oct. 2. 788. Safe conduct for Margery wife of John de Gosewyk, going to Scotland to ransom her husband, a prisoner there. Barnard castle. [Patent, 16 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 21.]

Oct. 13. 790. The K. to the Earl of Pembroke. Understanding from his spies that the Scots are around [North] Allerton, commands the Earl to collect his forces and raise the country towards Byland, reaching it by Thursday the 14th as early in the day as possible, where he will find the Earl of Richmond and Henry de Beaumont, with

EDWARD II. —— 1322. instructions how to act. The K. is near hand in safety collecting his forces. 13th October, 'the hour of vespers,' 16th year. Rivaux. This letter sent in duplicate by different bearers. [Sir F. Palgrave's Transcripts, vol. 63, p. 60.]

Oct. 14. 791. Roll of harness bought at York and Newcastle-upon-Tyne for the Scottish war in the 15th and 16th years.

[Extract.]

Total harness lost at Ryvaux by the sudden attack of the Scots there on 14th October 16th year, 11*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, [consisting of girths, buckles, cart saddles, traces, &c., in 3 of the royal carts.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Miscellanea (Army), No. $\frac{3}{1}\frac{8}{8}$.]

Oct. 27. Fœdera, ii. 498. 792. The K. permits John of Brittany earl of Richmond, to have the attendance of 7 persons of his family for recreation and service, while a prisoner in Scotland. York. [Patent, 16 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 19.]

Oct. 27. 793. Safe conduct for Friar Robert of Staindrop warden of the Friars Minors of York, going to see the Earl of Richmond in Scotland, and permission to remain with another friar of the Order, an Englishman, for the Earl's consolation; also for 5 persons, whom the Earl may appoint, to take clothes, beds, and provisions to him. York. [Patent, 16 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 19.]

Nov. 24. 794. The K. signifies to the Barons that, whereas on 4th March 1314–15 he committed to Robert de Leybourne sometime keeper of Carlisle castle, the manor of Ulvedale, escheated by Alexander Stywarde, a Scottish rebel, in satisfaction of his claims for keeping the castle and city, and thereafter, on 1st December 1318, granted the manor to the late Bartholomew de Badelesmere and his heirs; and, being unwilling that Robert should lose thereby, they are to reckon with him and assign him some debt in satisfaction of his arrears. York. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 16 Edw. II. m. 18.]

Dec. 10. 795. Protection for John of Brittany earl of Richmond, lately made prisoner by the Scots, and still detained in Scotland. Hathelsey. [Patent, 16 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 10.]

Dec. 28. Fœdera, ii. 501. 796. Safe conduct for the men of Henry lord of Sully, a prisoner with the Scots, to the number of eight or ten. York. [Patent, 16 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 11.]

Dec. 29. 797. Indenture on 29th December in the 16th year, at York, whereby David de Strabolgy earl of Athol undertakes to keep the March of Northumberland with 40 men-at-arms and 60 hobelers well mounted and arrayed, and to make forays on the enemy, up till Pentecost following; receiving pay always for eight days at a time.

EDWARD II. The K.'s and Earl's seals appended 'entregeablement.' [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

1323. One fragment, red wax, attached to tag. 3 pales on a shield (Athol).

[1322.] 798. Warrant to the keepers of the Great seal to issue letters in favour of Antoigne de Lucy, to whom the K. has granted the lands of Alisaundre Steward (Seneschal), an enemy, in Ulvedale. [.] [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 8.]

Circa [1322.] 799. Petition [by the dwellers on the Marches] to the K., relating their dire sufferings for the last eight years and still, at the hands of the Scots, which have become unendurable, and nothing but the K.'s presence with the whole power of England will abate them, or they must leave the country. They have nothing but their naked bodies for his service. They ask that the commission to Andrew de Hardcla warden of Carlisle, be changed, as it is quite insufficient for the defence of the Border. Assure the K. that it is useless to spend money on wardens of the March who are unable to keep down the enemy, and he must come himself with a strong force. Refer him to the bearer for news of the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland. [No date.]

(Endorsed) The Council think that Sir Andrew de Harcla warden of Carlisle and neighbourhood, should be instructed to harass the enemy in every way, at the advice of the best men of the county. [Royal Letters, No. 4342.]

1322–23. Jan. 8. 800. The K. orders that no truce be made with the Scots without his knowledge. Cowyk. [Patent, 16 Edw. II. p. 1, m. 8.]

Jan. 13. 802. Warrant to William de Ayremynne to search the Chancery rolls, and certify the K. by the bearer if his liege Andrew de Harcla earl of Carlisle, has any commission under the Great seal to treat with the Scots, and its endurance. And to hasten the bearer. Cowyk. [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 1.]

Jan. 19. 803. Writ of Privy seal sending to the Treasurer and Barons, and others the K.'s Council at York, the transcript of an endenture between Andrew de Harcla earl of Carlisle and Robert de Brus, which appears to the K. fraught with great danger; wherefore he has ordered William le Latymer to remain in command of the forces at York for its safety. Stowe Park.

(Enclosure) Agreed between Sir Robert de Bruys on one part and the Earl of Carlisle on the other—(1) That each realm shall have its own national king; (2) that they shall aid him (Brus) to maintain Scotland against all gainsayers; (3) in like manner the K. (Brus)

EDWARD II. —— 1322–23. and the Earl and adherents shall maintain the realm of England at the judgment (dit) of 12 persons sworn, or the majority (6 elected by the K. and 6 by the Earl); and the great lords shall be bound to perform their decree in all points, to the common good of both realms. If the K. of England assents to these conditions within a year, and the K. of Scotland has his realm secured to him and his heirs, the latter will found an abbey in Scotland of 500 marks sterling rent, for the souls of those slain in war, and, moreover, within 10 years will pay 40,000 marks sterling,—4000 yearly. The K. of England shall also have the marriage of the K. of Scotland's heir male, as advised by the aforesaid 12 persons. If the Ks. agree, they shall not be bound to receive in either realm any one who has been against them, or to restore his lands, except of their free grace. The Earl of Morreve has sworn on the K. of Scotland's soul to maintain all who adhere to him, and make no peace unless they are included. The Earl of Carlisle has sworn in like manner. Norman French. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 16 Edw. II. m. 70.]

Feb. 3. 804. Warrant to the keepers of the Great seal to issue letters in favour of the K.'s nephew Hugh le Despenser, 'le puisnez,' to whom he has granted the manor of Carleton near Basyngham, Lincolnshire, escheated by Gerveys Avenel and Johanna his wife, who adhere to the Scots. Newark. [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 1.]

Feb. 28. 805. The K. to his keepers of the Great seal. Orders a pardon of all his offences to Ughtred de Gevelestone, who lately brought the good news of the capture of the rebel Andrew de Hartela. Knaresburgh. [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 1.]

March 18. 806. The K. signifies that, as Thomas Uhtred is going to Scotland by his leave for the deliverance of his hostages lying there, and thus cannot attend to his account at Exchequer this Easter for the castle and honour of Pykerynge, he has respited it till next Michaelmas. Doncaster. Under his Privy seal. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 16 Edw. II. m. 23, dorso.]

March 21. 807. Letter, Robert K. of Scotland, to Sir Henry de Sully chivaler, complaining that in the K. of England's letter, of which Sir Henry has sent him a transcript, he is not named as a principal, but included with the least of his subjects. Will not agree to a truce on these terms; but if properly addressed, will do so willingly. Sends the transcript, which he cannot think he has read. Asks safe conduct for his envoys Sir Alexander de Seton and Sir William de Mountfichet knights, and Master Walter de Twynham clerk. Will not remain at Berwick beyond Wednesday in Easter week, so asks a speedy reply. Written at Berwick, 21st March, at the hour of tierce, in reply to his letter received the night before. [Chancery Scots Documents, No. 166.]

Fœdera, ii. 511.

EDWARD II. —— 1323. March 30. 808. The K. sends his keepers of the Great seal a petition from the Bishop of Glasgow, and commands letters to the Pope in support. Langley.

(Enclosure) John bishop of Glasgow begs the K. to write to the Pope that he be not hindered (enpesche) in his court for the service he owes to him and the 'College' by reason of the said bishopric, from which he gets nothing. [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 2.]

Circa April 22. 809. Letter, William de Herle and Geoffry le Scrope to the Chancellor. Referring to their late parley with the Scottish envoys at Newcastle, they enclose transcript of letter under Sir Robert de Brus's seal, and beg that a similar one be sent them under the Great seal for the exchange of the Earl of Moray, if possible, to Bamburgh by Ascension Day [May 5], as the exchange is to be made on Friday morning after [6th], if the Earl arrives. Also letters under the Great seal prolonging the truce 15 days after Trinity, and the safe conduct of the Bishop of St Andrews and others named, and also the Earl of Moray's safe conduct.

(Enclosure) Letters patent by Robert K. of Scotland, promising that, as Sirs Thomas de Wake, John de Hastinges, and the Lord de Ross knights, with Henry de Percy and the elder son of Hugh le Despenser, are named hostages for the safe return from England of his nephew the Earl of Moray, they shall be honourably entreated within his realm, and brought back to Tweedmouth whenever the Earl is ready there to return to Scotland. If the Earl meanwhile dies a natural death, or the treaty fails of effect, the hostages shall be free to return to their own country. For security he specially empowers his bachelor Sir Alexander de Seton to make oath on his soul. Berwick, 22nd April 18th year. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

May 9. 810. The K. commands the Bishop of Norwich the chancellor, to extend the safe conduct of the Bishop of St Andrews and those with him, also that of the Earl of Morref, for 15 days after Trinity. Cowik. [Privy Seals (Tower), 16 Edw. II. File 3.]

May 30. Fœdera, ii. 521. 811. The K. commands the sheriffs of Northumberland [and 15 other counties] and the Warden of the Cinque Ports, to proclaim the truce with Robert de Brus, for 13 years from 12th June next. Thorpe near York. [Close, 16 Edw. II. m. 5, dorso.]

June 5. 812. The K. commands the Chamberlain of North Wales to discharge the arrears due to the Scottish prisoners in Beaumaris castle. Bishopsthorpe. [Close, 16 Edw. II. m. 5.]

June 14. 813. The K. commands Richard de Emeldon mayor of Newcastle, one of the wardens of the truce with the Scots in Northumberland, to permit John de Walton of Baumburgh and William de Henedrawe of same place, to buy 20 chalders of sea-coal in Newcastle to send to EDWARD II. Scotland for delivery of their two sons, hostages there. Cowyk.

She survived him 11 years and more. Her son David de Strabolgi is now her heir. Elizabeth her younger sister was 14. They are the said John Comyn's nearest heirs. David is 18½ years of age and Elizabeth is 26. [Seals lost.]

[Attached is an inquisition of the same estates taken on 8th June preceding. There the Countess of Athol and Elizabeth her sister are found to be the heirs, the Countess's age being given as 30 on the 10th May . . . ., Elizabeth's as 26 on All Saints' day 1325.] [Inq. p. m., 19 Edw. II. No. 86.]

Both partly blackened with galls.

Sept. 7. 887. Commission of inquiry into the case of John de Wygemore, Archibald de Crabarry, and other Scottish merchants, who, when they with some scholars and merchandize in a Flemish vessel bound to Flanders, through fear of pirates, were brought for safety into Scarborough by William Punche, an English mariner, along

EDWARD II. 1326. with John Stuffe of Aberdeen, another Scottish merchant who had likewise taken refuge there from the pirates from another vessel, were all arrested by the sheriff of York and the guardians of Scarborough, and put in prison. Porchester. Patent, 20 Edw. II. m. 20, dorso.]

Sept. 28. 888. Commission to Robert le Constable and two other justices to inquire who seized a vessel called 'la Pelarym' of Flanders at Whiteby during the truce, killed the master, Walter called Fosse, 9 Scottish merchants, 16 Scottish pilgrims, and 13 women, passengers, carried off the cargo and goods worth 2000*l.*, and set the vessel adrift; also, who captured the derelict and the rest of the cargo; and make diligent search for the resetters and commit them all to prison. Tower of London. By the K. himself. [Patent, 20 Edw. II. m. 15, dorso.]

On 15th October another writ issued to two justices of Great Yarmouth to inquire into the same outrage. Tyntern. [m. 14, dorso.]

Oct. 12. 889. The K. signifies that he has given leave to Master Simon of Crail (Caral), a Scottish clerk (lately captured on the high seas between Scotland and Flanders with his two servants and goods, brought into Scarborough, and thence to the K.), to return to Scotland, or proceed to Flanders from that port or Kingston-upon-Hulle, and grants him safe conduct. Gloucester. [Patent, 20 Edw. II. m. 13.]

The sheriff of York ordered to liberate Master Simon. [Close, 20 Edw. II. m. 6.]

Dec. 18. 890. The K. notwithstanding the death of the Countess Johanna of Athol cousin and one of the heirs of the late Adomar earl of Pembroke, confirms to her surviving husband David Strabolgy earl of Athol the castle and manor of Mitford, manor of Pount Eland and Parva Eland, in Northumberland, extent 52*l.* 10¼*d.*; with 20*l.* of rent in Beverley, &c., in Yorkshire, as part of her purparty, to be held by the Earl by the courtesy of England. Kenilworth. [Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 20 Edw. II. m. 28.]

[1314–26.] 891. Petition by the poor burgesses of Corebrig praying the K. and Council to grant them a 'pountage' to keep up their bridge till they can do so themselves, as they are so utterly ruined by the Scottish enemy. There is no other bridge on the March but that of Newcastle-on-Tyne, by which merchants can cross with their goods towards Carlisle, and their own is in need of repair. They understand they hold in chief of the K. after the 'desese' of Munsire Johan de Clavereng their lord. [No date.] [Exchequer, Q. R. Ancient Miscellanea (Misc.), No. 939.]

[1319–26.] 892. The Prior and convent of Gyseburn to the K. In reply to his mandate that they should receive in their house Robert of Roxburgh for life on the same terms as the late Henry le Chareter in the

EDWARD II. —— [1319-26.] time of Edward his father, they say, as God is their witness, they would do so, but from their utter inability. Their monastery, with books, vestments, and all the ornaments, was lamentably consumed by a sudden fire; their churches in Annandale, Carlisle, and Durham, from which the greater part of their income is derived, are wasted by the wretched invasion of the Scots and 'schavaldi'; at present they are maintaining Guy a canon of Jedburgh, and one William Curthose, by the K.'s command, and a canon of Hexham and another of Brynkeburne, who have been driven from their houses; at the Queen's request they are giving robes and victuals to a vallet Robert Pykebuske as if he were a fellow canon, with his servant and a horse, for life, and 20*s.* yearly. They beg his gracious excuse from further burdens. [No date.] [Chancery Portfolios (Scotland), No. $\frac{41}{165}$.]

[1319–26.] 893. Petition by the Abbot and convent of Thorneton-on-Humber, begging the K. to excuse them from the maintenance of Henry le Sodeman for which he has asked, as from the bad seasons, 'come de morte daumaile,' tithes of corn to the Cardinals, the support of the Abbot of Jedworth and his people, of a canon of Hexham for 3 years and more, and of one Hugh Dallyng during the late K. Edward's life, their house is in such poverty that they can bear no more burdens. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1314–26.] 894. Petition that the eleven canons of Jedburgh, who left Jedburgh with the Abbot (since dead) on the day after Roxburgh castle was lost, in the K.'s 7th year, should have restoration of the goods left by the Abbot for their support at Thornton-on-Humber, of their church of Arthuret, and a manor in Tyndale which the K. had given away. [Appendix No. 1.] [Parliamentary Petitions (uncalendared), last File.]

[1307–26.] 895. Petition by Gilbert de Culwenne to the K. shewing that he owes 89*l.* 12*s.* 4½*d.* while one of the collectors of the 20th and 15th from Cumberland, which he was bound to pay by 10 marks yearly at Exchequer; that the greater part of his land is in Scotland in the enemies' hand, yielding nothing, and the rest in Cumberland is so wasted by them that he has no means of payment. Prays forgiveness of the debt. [No date.]

(Endorsed) The K. is advised that he favoured him greatly in the instalments, and must be paid accordingly. [Parliamentary Petitions No. 2112.]

[1307–26.] 896. Petition to the K. by John de Denum shewing that he has a fortress called the Tower of Melmorby in Cumberland, capable of being guarded by 12 men-at-arms. He has kept the Tower till now against many assaults of the Scots, always well defended by the grace of God, to their great damage and loss of their men. But his lands are so wasted that he cannot provide a garrison, and therefore prays help from the K. For it would be a great loss to the country around if 'she' was taken. [No date.]

EDWARD II. —— (Endorsed) Some marriage ward or farm to be looked out, and the K. will give him a reward for looking after the safety of the country. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 2513.]

1326–27. Jan. 20. 897. The K. having regard to the good services of the late David de Strabolgi earl of Athol, that his body may be decently buried, grants all his goods and chattels to his executors to perform his obsequies and carry out his testament. Kenilworth. [Close, 20 Edw. II. m. 1; Exchequer, Q. R. Memoranda, 20 Edw. II. m. 31.]

[1318–26.] 898. Petition by Lewis bishop of Durham, that the K. would restore to his see the manor of Werk in Tyndale and advowson of Symoundburne church, &c., given by Sir John de Balliol, late K. of Scotland, to 'Sire Antoyne' then bishop, and his successors, and held till the K.'s father deprived Sire Antoyne of it while he was at Rome on business; all as the record and process in Exchequer in London attests. [No date.]

(Deliverance) The Council can do nothing till the records are produced, and the Officers of Exchequer are ordered to do so. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1326.] 899. Thomas de Bekering represents to the K. that his lands in Northumberland are burned and destroyed, his people dead and driven away (exillez), and prays for a grant in recompense of the forfeited lands of Sir Johan de Middelton, which are held of the petitioner, viz., Belsowe and Thorneburgh, worth 10*l.* in peace time. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

EDWARD III.

EDW. III. 1326–27. Jan. 30. 900. Grant by the K. to his cousin Isabella de Beaumont of Vescy (Veciaco), of the ward of the lands of the late David de Strabolgy earl of Athol, till the majority of David his son and heir. Westminster. [Close, 1 Edw. III. pt. 1, m. 18.]

Jan. 31. 901. Indenture attesting that on the last day of January 1st year of the K.'s reign, J[ohn] bishop of Winchester late treasurer, in virtue of the K.'s letters close under the Great seal, directed to him on the 28th of same month, delivered to A[dam] bishop of Hereford now treasurer, the keys of the Treasuries at Westminster and in the Tower of London—with the gold and silver vessels, plate, and jewels and money [specified in detail]. In the Treasury at the Tower in a 'huche' there were three coffers: one containing the Holy Cross called la Croiz [Neyth]; in another the foot of said cross; and in the third .... Feb. 999. The K. restores the church of Artureth, in the diocese of Carlisle, to the Abbot and convent of Geddeworthe, as it has been found by inquisition that they held it in proprios usus for time beyond memory, till taken from them by the late K. Windsor. [Patent, 4 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 40.]

March 14. 1000. The K. commands Sir Nichol de Langeford and Roger 'ate Asshe' to arrest the person of the Countess of Kent in Arundel castle, with her 'joialx,' &c., there, and take her to Salesbury castle for safe custody, allowing her no attendance on the way but two 'damoiselles' and her children. Winchester. [Privy Seals (Tower), 4 Edw. III. File 7.]

Jan. 26–April 2. 1001. Writ commanding the escheator ultra Trent to hold an inquiry into the age of David de Strabolgi earl of Athol, son and heir of the late David de Strabolgi earl of Athol, who has petitioned the K. for his heritage. Eltham, 26th January 4th year.

(Endorsement) That Isabella de Vescy and Richard Talbot, summoned under the writ to appear for their interest, made no appearance.

[Extracts.]

(Attached) 'Probacio' taken at Newcastle-upon-Tyne on 2nd April following, by the escheator and 12 jurors examined on oath.

(1) Robert de Milneburne, the first juror, 50 years of age and more, says that David was born on 1st February, in the .... year of the K.'s father, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and baptized in the church of St Nicholas there, Guyschard de Charron junior, and Master John de Hadyngton being his sponsors, and was 21 years old on 1st February last. He knows this because Thomas de Milneburne his father died

EDW. III. —— 1329–30. on . . . . next before that day, and on his going to Newcastle to buy wax for his burial, he saw David baptized with great solemnity after . . . .

(2) John de Plesis, second juror, 50 years of age and more, concurs with Robert in omnibus. He knows because he has . . . .

(3) Robert de Haukewell, third juror, age ut supra, concurs. Knows the date, as his daughter Alicia was born the same day . . . .

(4) Thomas de Swetoppe, fourth juror, aged ut supra, concurs. Knows the date, because his sister Isolde died same day, whose obit is inserted in the calendar of said St Nicholas' church. He saw David baptized there with great solemnity, the priest scattering the water very freely ('sacerdote asspergente aquam abundiam superflue') . . . .

(5) [Nicholas de Eland] the fifth juror, aged 40 years, concurs with the first. Says that David, immediately after baptism, was taken with his nurse to his father's house in Eland, and there nursed for 3 years. He himself was then 19 years of age.

[The remaining seven jurors concur for various reasons. This part of the document much mutilated.] [Seals lost.] [Inq. p. m. 4 Edw. III. (1st Nos.), No. 41.]

Greatly defaced and part lost.

1330. April 3. 1002. The K. orders payment to his 'treschiere dame et miere' Isabella queen of England, of the 5000 marks lately received by his clerk from David K. of Scotland. Wodestok. [Privy Seals (Tower), 4 Edw. III. File 7.]

July 10. 1006. The K. commands the sheriff of York to pay Johanna Comyn of Boghan the half year due at Easter last of 40*l.* per annum granted to her on 27th March 1327, or shew cause why unpaid, by the morrow of St Laurence. Oseneye.

Edw. III. —— 1330. (Endorsed) Henry de Fauconberge sheriff, returns that he could not pay till she satisfied the K. for 24*l.* 10*s.*, value of 30 acres of the manor of Malton, sown with wheat and hay (fêno), as directed by precept. [Chancery Files, Bundle No. 350.]

July 15. Fœdera, ii. 795. 1007. Receipt by the K. to David K. of Scots, for 10,000 marks sterling, due at Midsummer last, of the 30,000 payable under the late treaty. Woodstock. [Patent, 4 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 5.]

Aug. 7. 1008. The K. to John Darcy lord of Werk in Tyndale, or his lieutenant. Commands him to give seisin to David de Strabolgi earl of Athol, as heir of his mother Johanna, elder sister of the late John Comyn of Badenagh, of the site of Tyrsete manor [and other lands particularly specified] in Tyndale, in presence of Richard Talbot and Elizabeth his wife, the younger sister and coheir of John Comyn; the K. respiting the Earl's homage till the quinzaine of Michaelmas next of special favour, and reserving to Margaret, who was wife of John Comyn, her dower therefrom. Clyve. [Close, 4 Edw. III. m. 25.]

[Sept. 18.] 1009. Northumberland:—H. Lescrope and J. Travers appointed to hold an assize of novel disseisin arraigned by William de Clyve parson of Angram church, against Athelardus de Douglas, regarding common pasture in Faudon. Nottingham. [Patent, 4 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 8, dorso.]

Corrected by a later entry to 'Archebaldus' Douglas and others. [m. 3, dorso.]

Dec. 9. 1011. The K. commands the escheator citra Trent to restore his lands to Thomas Wake of Lidel, which had been seized on suspicion of his adherence to the late Edmund earl of Kent, from which he has exonerated himself. Westminster.

Similar to the escheators of 5 counties. [Close, 4 Edw. III. m. 15.]

Dec. 14. 1012. Writ to the officers of the Treasury to allow Hugh Rydel executor of the testament of William Ridel, late warden of Bernard's castle, credit in his compotus for various sums due the deceased in the wardrobe accounts of the K.'s father and grandfather. Westminster. [Close, 4 Edw. III. m. 8.]

Dec. 30. Fœdera, ii. 804. 1013. The K. requests David K. of Scots to make restitution of their lands and possessions in Scotland to Thomas Wake lord of Lidel and Henry de Beaumont earl of Buchan, as he understands that Henry de Percy only has received his, in terms of the treaty with the late Robert K. of Scotland. Westminster. [Close, 4 Edw. III. m. 12, dorso.]

EDW. III. —— [1330.] 1014. Petition to the K. and Council by John de Athol (Athelles) and Maud his wife, tenants of parts of [the late Sir Robert] Burughwasshe's [lands], who owed the late K. Edward the K.'s father certain debts, that these debts should be apportioned among the lands held of said Sir Robert, and respite be granted, pending the 'seute' by the petitioners for apportionment.

(Endorsed) The Exchequer to inform themselves what parcel he holds, and not onerate him beyond it. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 69.]

Much mutilated. No date.

[1330.] 1015. Arnaud de Scot' shews the K. and Council how he served the K. his father in Scotland in his last war, with 15 other Gascons; was at the abbey of Melros, where he lost 4 of his men; also at 'Blakhaummor,' where he was taken, wounded almost to death, and ransomed for 20 marks sterling, which he paid; and has since served in this war in Gascony under Matheu de Luchon, as 'Monseignour' the Earl of Kent knows well, besides others. Prays for a grant of the serjauntie of Bayonne, which will cost the K. nothing, as the town pays the expenses. [No date.]

(Endorsed) 'Le Roi ne voet mie multiplier le nombre des seriantz avant qil soit apris de lestat de la Duche.' [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

1330-31. Jan. 2. 1016. The K. exonerates David earl of Athol from all suspicion of being concerned in the late armed rising against the K. with other magnates at Bedford, as he submitted to the K. and agreed to pay 5000*l.* in Chancery at the K.'s direction; and frees him of the said sum, for which a summons of Exchequer has issued. Guldeford. [Patent, 4 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 18.]

Jan. 10. Fœdera, ii. 805. 1017. Receipt by the K. for 5000 marks sterling in part payment of 10,000 due on St John Baptist's day next by David K. of Scotland, in full satisfaction of the 30,000 due under the treaty with the late K. Robert. Westminster.

Two other receipts for 3000 and 2000 marks from the said K. David, and one for the entire 10,000 marks. Ibid. [Patent, 4 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 2 and 16.]

Jan. 12. 1018. The K. to David K. of Scotland. Recommends to him certain merchants of the Society of the Bardi of Florence, who are going with their goods to Scotland, and begs him to pay them the 10,000 marks (the balance of the 30,000 due under the treaty with the late K. of Scotland), which he has assigned to them. Westminster. [Close, 4 Edw. III. m. 4.]

Jan. 15. 1019. The K. to John Darcy lord of Werk in Tyndale, or the bailiff of that Liberty. Commands him to restore to Margaret widow of Edmund earl of Kent, and formerly wife of John Comyn of Bade-

EDW. III. —— 1330–31. nagh deceased, certain lands assigned to her as dower, of the said John's estate, which had been taken in the K.'s hand on the Earl's death, and for which she has petitioned. Westminster. [Close, 4 Edw. III. m. 7.]

Jan. 17. 1020. The K. grants his liege John de Torthorald, whose father James de Torthorald was long a willing adherent of the late K., and lost his lands in Scotland thereby, and was killed there in his service, 100*s.* a year from the farm of the vill of Ixnyng in Suffolk, for his support, as his case is attested by persons whom the K. trusts. Westminster. [Privy Seals (Tower), 4 Edw. III. File 2; and Patent, 4 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 13.]

Jan. 28. 1021. Inquisition [under writ of certiorari of 7th December preceding] before Ranulph de Dacre sheriff of Cumberland, [and 12 jurors], who found that Robert of Gryndone and Marjory his wife hold a tenement in the city of Carlisle of the Abbot of Geddewrth by service of 8*s.* per annum, which is in arrear for 12 years past. They also find the Abbot on all his visits, for each horse 'unam candelam de Paris,' and litter for beds and the horses. The Abbot has therein a place for a chamber and a stable. [Seals lost.] [Chancery Files, Bundle No. 339.]

[1330–31.] Jan. (?) 1022. Petition to the K. shewing that the vill of Upsetelyngton west near Norham, has from time beyond memory been a 'parcele' of England, the writs of the Bishop of Durham running there, and those of the K. when the see is vacant. No Bishop of Durham has ever done homage or service for it to a K. of Scotland,—but because it is on the north side of Tweed, the Scots keep it, in violation of the truce. Also at Twydmouth, where its lords had a ferry to Berwick, the people of Berwick land with their boats and claim the whole water as 'parcele' of Scotland, suffering no English boat to touch on the Scottish side, thus infringing the rights of the English crown. The Wardens of the truce will not interfere. The petitioners ask the K. to maintain his rights. [No date.]

(Endorsed) Let the Wardens be ordered to see to the K.'s rights, and, if differences ensue, certify the K. quickly. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 8266.]

1330–31. Feb. 2. 1023. David K. of Scots to the K. Acknowledges receipt at Clakmanan on the previous day, of his letter on the affairs of Thomas de Wake and Henry de Beaumont, knights; but, as his Council was not there, he has assigned to the bearers of the letter the 18th March next at Berwick-on Tweed, to deliberate on their business with his Council. Clakmanan, 2nd February, 2nd of his reign. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Mark of round seal, red wax, on back.

Edw. III. —— 1330–31. Feb. 3. Fœdera, ii. 806–7.

1024. The K. requests David K. of Scots to order Patrick de Dunbar earl of March, to restore the vill of Upsetlington to Lewis bishop of Durham, in accordance with the treaty with Robert late K. of Scots, as it has been the patrimony of the church of St Cuthbert for time beyond memory. Langley.

Similar to Thomas earl of Morref, warden of the land of Scotland, Langley.

Similar to Patrick de Dunbar earl of March, to desist from his armed occupation. Langley. [Close, 5 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 28, dorso.]

Feb. 6.

1025. The K. commands Antony de Lucy keeper of his manor of Penreth, to cause the ovens of that town, leased to the bakers for a fixed rent, to be repaired at the K.'s cost, as they have been burned and destroyed by the late invasion of the Scots, and the bakers in their petition say the custom has been so to repair them. Langeley. [Close, 5 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 24.]

Feb. 16. Fœdera, ii. 802.

1026. The K. appoints William archbishop of York, William prior of Durham, Henry de Percy, and six others, his justiciars for enforcing the observance of the treaty with Scotland in Northumberland. Windsor.

Similar commission to John de Haryngton, Ranulph de Dacre, and Richard de Denton for Cumberland. [Patent, 5 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 28, dorso.]

Circa Feb. 18.

1027. Northumberland:—Commission to three justices to hold an assize of novel disseisin arraigned by William de Atton of Newcastle-on-Tyne against John de Stryvelyn of Est Swynburne, concerning a tenement in Est Swynburne. [Patent, 5 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 29, dorso.]

Feb. 24.

1028. The K. appoints three justices to inquire by a jury of Kent, into the complaint of John de Athol (Asceles), that Bartholomew de Burghershe and others abducted his wife Matillidis at Bokton Allulf, with his goods and chattels there and at Stontyng and Siflatone, to the value of 2000*l.*, and still detain them. Croyndone.

Similar commission on his complaint that they carried off his goods, &c., at Burghershe, to the value of 1000*l.* Ibid. [Patent, 5 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 26, dorso.]

Feb. 24. Fœdera, ii. 809.

1029. The K. requests David K. of Scots, to restore their possessions to Thomas Wake of Lydel and Henry de Beaumont earl of Buchan, in virtue of the treaty with the late K. Robert, in like manner with Henry de Percy; and, although he had in reply appointed a meeting at Berwick on 18th March to discuss the matter, that meanwhile, he would give the bearers a favourable answer to their claim, to avoid future dissension. Edw. III. —— [1331.] End of Sept.

1035. The Bishop of Durham shews the K. and Council, that the manor and castle of Norham from time beyond memory have belonged to his see, and his writs run within the franchise. The vill of West Upsettlington is a parcel of the franchise, and no Scottish bishop has ever ruled it. But the K. of Scotland has summoned him to his Parliament for said vill, as appears by the letters attached. Prays the K. to forbid such interference with his rights.

(Endorsed) To write letters to the K. of Scotland and Guardian to suspend the summons complained of.

(Enclosures) (1) Robert du Manoirs informs the Bishop that on Thursday before St Matthew's day, while his two justices of assize were at Norham, and the country summoned, Sir Robert de Lauder (Lowethre) justiciar of Lothian (Lowenes), commanded . . . ., and next Sunday the K. of Scotland's bailiffs came to West Upsettlington, and summoned the Bishop for the four baronies, to attend the Parliament at Scone on Friday next before the Feast of St . . . . to shew his title to them.

Mutilated.

(2) Robert de Lauder justiciar of Lothian, to the Bishop of Durham's bailiffs of Upsettlington. The Guardian of Scotland has heard they are 'querelling' in their court of Norham by a writ of recognizance, Walter de Upsettlington for his land of Upsettlington, a member of Scotland, in prejudice of the K. of Scotland. Commands them on behalf of the Guardian, to stay proceedings till it is found what service that land owes to Norham, as it is held in chief of the K. of Scotland, and this at their peril. They will find it to the profit of St Cuthbert and the honour of the K. their patron. Berwick, the morrow of Holy Rood day. [September 15.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1340.] End of July. 1338. John de Moubray's petitions to 'Monseigneur le Duk' [of Cornwall] and the K.'s Council.

(1) He represents that on 1st May last he was appointed Warden of Berwick for a year, with 120 men-at-arms, 100 hobelours, 200 archers, 48 watchmen, 1 'maistre engynour,' and 4 valletz, whereof 60 men-at-arms, (including 3 bannerets and 10 knights,) 20 hobelours and 60 archers, found by him, were to be at the K.'s pay from half quarter to half quarter, the others from month to month, as his indenture bears. There is now due for a quarter, less 15 days, the sum of 1231*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.*, of which he has not had a penny. He begs the Duke and Council to order immediate payment, and prompter settlement henceforth. The peril is now greater than when he undertook the ward, for the whole country is in war up to the gates of the town. If it had not been so, he would have held himself free of his charge from this day forwards.

The sum due for himself and his own proper retinue for the quarter is . . . . . 485*l.* 19*s.*
That for the rest of the garrison for three months, . 679*l.*

Total, 1174*l.* 19*s.*

(2) He begs that a chamberlain or paymaster be appointed, 'avisez, sages e attempre,' who will treat the townsmen with courtesy and in a proper manner.

The Chamberlain, who is chancellor, will arrange this.

(3) That a place or places be prepared where the pay of the garrison may be kept in safety by the receiver.

Let the Bishop of Durham be written to hereon to . . . .

(4) That 30 'perchees' of the town wall are so ruinous and on point of falling, that they cannot stand this coming winter, and to avoid 'outrageous' expense, he begs the Duke and Council will order

Edw. III. their immediate repair; as, though 100 marks will do it now, 300*l.*
—— and more will not replace them if they fall.
[1340.] Let the Chamberlain be ordered to see to this.

(5) That moneys be ordered for the victualler of Berwick, as provided in the aforesaid indenture, for William Snoryng and John atte Fenne of Lynn, who ought to have delivered at Berwick 500 qrs. wheat, 750 qrs. of malt, 500 qrs. of peas, and 500 qrs. oats, have only brought 300 qrs. malt and 100 qrs. peas; while Robert Bayous and Henry le Smyth, who should have delivered as much as the two others, have only brought 200 qrs. wheat, 300 qrs. malt, and 30 qrs. oats; all which were delivered by Robert de Tughale, late chamberlain, to the 'gageours' of the town for their 'gages due' in his time; so there is no grain in the 'gerner,' nor has there been for a month past. And these merchants sell to the K. by English measure wheat and malt at 9*s.* per qr., peas and oats at 6*s.*, while by Scots measure wheat is 6*s.*, malt 5*s.*, and peas and oats 3*s.*; at which prices the merchants around sell their victual in the town.

Let the merchants be ordered to fulfil their contracts; and the Chamberlain to see to their safe keeping when the victuals arrive at the town.

(6) The sum total of the pay of Sir John and his garrison for a year is 4939*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, not a penny of which has been paid him. He begs that an assignment of the ninth granted to the K. from the county of York be made to him for the above amount. [No date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

July 21. 1616. William baron of Greystoke, on this day became security to produce William de Dacre before the Council on the quinzaine of Michaelmas next, to answer for the loss of the castle of Hermitage (Ermygate) in Scotland, alleged against him. [Close, 30 Edw. III. m. 12, dorso.]

Aug. 3. 1617. The K. commands the constable of the Tower to deliver Alexander de Flex a Scotsman, from prison, as he has made oath before the Council to hold no communication with the enemy in Scotland. Westminster. [Close, 30 Edw. III. m. 13.]

Aug. 8. 1618. The K. grants his liege Adam Preudregest 20*l.* yearly in support of himself, his wife and children, till he recovers the profits of his lands on the March at present in possession of the Scots enemy. Westminster. [Patent, 30 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 8.]

Aug. 11. 1619. To Adam Prendregest, due him by the K. for his expenses retaining men-at-arms and archers in the garrison of Berwick-on-Tweed and elsewhere on the March of Scotland—20*l.* [Issue Roll (Pells), Easter, 30 Edw. III. m. 21.]

Aug. 16. 1620. The K. pardons John Madok fuller, son of Robert Hayward of Soureby, for killing William Craihare, a Scotsman, as it was in self-defence and not of malice aforethought. Westminster. [Patent, 30 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 7.]

Edw. III. —— 1356. Oct. 14. 1621. The K. grants special licence to David de Strabolgi earl of Athol, to settle the manor of Brabourne in Kent, presently held in dower by Katherine the late Earl's widow, reverting to the present Earl on her death; to remain with Elizabeth de Burgo, Nicholas Daumory, and John de Lenne clerk, and their heirs; and that they on receiving Katherine's attornment may grant their reversion to the said Earl and Elizabeth his wife, and the Earl's heirs. Westminster. [Patent, 30 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 2.]

Similar licence as to the manors of Styvekeye and Fyleby in Norfolk, and Dunham in Nottingham (the two latter held in dower by Maria de St Pol countess of Pembroke, and the first by the Earl himself). Westminster, 18th July. [m. 13.]

Oct. 19. 1622. Pardon at the request of Edward de Balliol K. of Scotland, to certain nobles and others of the district, who hunted and fished in his company while staying at Haytefield, Yorkshire, when they killed 16 harts, 6 hinds, 8 'stagges,' 3 calves, and 6 roes, and in the park 8 does, a 'souren,' a 'sourell'; and in the ponds 2 pikes, $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet, 3 of 3 feet, 20 of $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet, 20 of 2 feet, 50 pikerells, $1\frac{1}{2}$ foot, 6 of 1 foot, in length; also 109 'perches, roches, tenches, and skelys,' and 6 'bremes' and 'bremettes.' Westminster. [Patent, 30 Edw. III. p. 3, m. 6.]

Oct. 20. 1623. Exemplification of an inquisition made under the K.'s commission, before Thomas de Seton and John de Moubray, as to the liberties, customs, and immunities, of his miners of Aldeneston in Cumberland, by a jury, at Penrith, on Thursday next after St Lawrence's day previous; who found that the miners, when they lived in 'shelis' and worked together, were used to elect one of themselves as coroner, and another as bailiff, called 'Kynges sergeant,' the coroner having power to hear and decide all pleas both civil and criminal, arising among them and their servants, and the 'Kynges sergeant' having power to put his judgments in execution; but that the present miners are now so dispersed at their work here and there in 'ones and twos,' that they should no longer exercise the above privileges. But that, from time beyond memory, while they worked in a body, they enjoyed the aforesaid liberties and immunities, paying yearly to the K.'s Exchequer at Carlisle 10 marks. Westminster. [Patent, 30 Edw. III. p. 3, m. 23.]

Nov. 24. Fœdera, iii. 813. 1624. The K. orders Thomas de Beaumont to return at once to prison in Scotland, as Walter de Haliburton, David de Anand, and Andrew Cambel, the K.'s prisoners, who were allowed to go to Scotland on parole, consider themselves released by having procured his liberation. Westminster. [Close, 30 Edw. III. m. 5.]

Nov. 28. 1625. The K. commands Thomas de Grey, Alan de Strothre, and Robert de Tughale to find out who carry wool, &c. of English growth

Edw. III. —— 1356. across the Border of Northumberland into Scotland, to defraud the K.'s customs, and imprison them, seizing also their wool, with wagons, carts, boats, and horses used in their illegal traffic. Westminster. [Patent, 30 Edw. III. p. 3, m. 7, dorso.]

1356–57. Feb. 4. Fœdera, iii. 345. 1626. The K. promises to his cousin Edward de Balliol, late K. of Scotland, to pay his debts, in the event of his death before an accounting is taken. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 24.]

1357. April 12. Fœdera, iii. 353. 1628. Warrants to the collectors of customs at St Botolph and Kingston-upon-Hull to pay the annuity of Edward de Balliol, late K. of Scotland, after defraying the assignments to Isabella the queen mother and Philippa queen consort. Westminster. [Close, 31 Edw. III. m. 15.]

[1357.] May 8. 1629. Indenture executed at London on 8th May, declaring that on default of any term of his ransom, K. David shall, without any further notice, return to prison in England within 3 weeks, and there remain till payment, with the hostages. In case of his hindrance from any reasonable cause, he shall within the same period send the Steward, the Lords of Douglas, of Morref, and John of the Isles, to remain with the other hostages till payment. In case of death, others to take their places, and all to be honourably entertained. In 'afforcement' of the hostages, three of the following, viz., the Steward of Scotland, the Earls of March, of Mar, Angus, Rosse, and Sutherland, the Lord of Douglas, and Thomas de Morref, shall come to England and remain till replaced by other three. Agreed also that the payments may be made either at Berwick-on-Tweed, if in the hands of the K. of England, or if not, at Norham; and if the K. of England wishes them made at Baumburgh, he shall grant safe conducts for that effect. [Other stringent clauses follow as to failure in payment by the K., nobles, and merchants of Scotland, and their obligation to procure the Pope's licence to the churchmen of Scotland, to bind their possessions for the K.'s ransom.] [Chapter House (Scots Docts.), Box 5, No 6.]

The document is much faded and in parts illegible.

1357. May 12. 1630. The K. appoints John de Coupeland and Robert de Tughale to inquire by a jury into the petition of Isabella widow of Adam de Prendregest of Scotland, stating that her late husband, at the time when Berwick-on-Tweed was last taken by the Scots, took 24 sacks of wool, 4 dickers of hides, and 2000 lambskins from the vill of Prendregest in Scotland to that of Hagarston in Northumberland,

Edw. III. to save them from the enemy; and, if correct, to deliver them to her.
—— Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 9, dorso.]

1357. May 16. 1631. The K. for the good services of the late Adam de P[r]endergest, a Scotsman, and his losses while taking his part against his countrymen, grants Isabella his widow, who is quite destitute, an annuity of 20 marks, charged on the issues of Northumberland; as also a house befitting her condition in Berwick-on-Tweed, for life, rent free, for her own and children's residence. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 7.]

May 16. 1632. The K. grants to his liege Philip de Glena of Scotland, for his good service now and hereafter, an annuity of 10 marks from the issues of Northumberland, towards his support. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 8.]

May 20. 1633. Grant by the K. to his son John earl of Richmond, and the heirs male of his body, of the castle lands and lordship of Lydell, both in England and Scotland, liferented by Blanchia widow of Thomas Wake, the reversion of which had been granted by the late John earl of Kent, to the K.—to revert to the K. after the death of Blanchia and his son, if the latter die without heir male of his body. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 1, m. 3.]

June 1. 1634. The K. grants to his liege Godfrey de Roos of Scotland, who has lost the most of his heritage by his steady adherence to him, 40*l.* per annum till he recovers his land. Westminster.

Similar for Robert de Colvylle of Scotland for 20 marks yearly, and for James de Loreyns of Scotland for 20*l.* yearly; for same reason. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 27.]

June 5. 1635. The K. commands the Warden of the Tower of London to receive from John de Clifford, William de Gledestan 'chivaler,' a Scottish prisoner, and keep him there. Westminster. By the K. himself. [Close, 31 Edw. III. m. 14.]

June 7. 1636. Inquisition [in virtue of two writs tested Westminster, 1st May preceding] taken at Roxburgh on Wednesday next after Trinity Sunday, A.D. 1357, before John de Stryvelyn, Gerard de Wydryngton, and Roger de Wyderyngton, by John Heswelle, John Kerre, David de Qwytton, William Corbet, Gilbert Corbet, Alan Corbet, Robert Raa, Adam Meen, James Watteson, William del Vicairs, William de Welles, and Thomas de Careton, who find that William Prendergest father of William 'son of William,' in the time of Edward the late K., was an adherent of the Scots from the time of the battle of Bannokburne, when he and Isabella his wife, said William's mother, and their children, being in Jedworth castle, traitorously surrendered it to the said Scots, and thereafter the said Williams, father and son, during the life of said Isabella, remained

EDW. III. —— 1357. at Stirling and Berwick-on-Tweed, out of the K. of England's allegiance, and after her death till the battle of Halydon, where William the father was slain fighting against England; and William his son being then 30 years of age and more, remained with Patrick de Dunbarre earl of March, in Berwick castle as an enemy of the present K. That certain lands in Cornhale within the Bishop of Durham's liberty of Norham in Northumberland, worth 20*l.* in time of peace, and at present 10 marks, should have descended to William the son as Isabella his mother's heritage. But Lodowic late bishop of Durham, as chief lord of the fee, occupied them as a forfeiture from the said surrender of Jedworthe, and thereafter gave them to William de Denum and Edmund his son, which latter, after his father's death, gave them to Sir William Heroun knight, who held them for a time, and they are now in the hands of said William son of William (Prendergest), by what title they know not. [No seals.] [Inq. ad quod damnum, 31 Edw. III. No. 35.]

June 24. 1637. The K. for his good service, gives licence to his beloved vallet Peter Tempest to marry Maria daughter of Sir William de Douglas knight, who was lately delivered by her father as a hostage in England. Mortelake. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 22.]

July 26. 1638. Recognisance by William Heroun knight, and Peter Tempest in solidum, to Edward de Letham knight; for 200 marks, with right to levy on their lands, &c. in Northumberland. Westminster. [Close, 31 Edw. III. m. 12, dorso.]

Aug. 1. 1639. Safe conduct at the request of John of the Isles, for John Longus of Portrush (Portrous), John son of Stephen, Doncan of the 'Dormitory,' William of Ulster, Henry of Abyndon, and Adam le Taillour, merchants of the said isles, to trade in England and Ireland and the K.'s dominions, with their vessel and 6 mariners, making oath to ship nothing for the K.'s enemies in Scotland, and to produce in Chancery the certificate of John of the Isles that their goods were discharged in the isles, within 3 months thereafter. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 12.]

Aug. 8. 1640. Commission to John Heroun, Roger Mauduyt, Alan de Strother sheriff of Northumberland, Roger de Wyderyngton, and John de Clyfford, to arrest a notorious traitor, William son of William Prendregest, who has failed to appear and answer to his indictment before Henry de Percy and other justices, and is infesting the March of Scotland, and hand him to the sheriff of Roxburgh to be imprisoned till brought before the justices. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 2, m. 9, dorso.]

Sept. 2. 1641. Inquisition [under writ tested Westminster, 7th July preceding] taken at Roxburgh on 2nd September 1357, before Robert de Tughale chamberlain of Berwick-on-Tweed, by Roger de Aulton,

Edw. III. —— 1357. Robert de Wodforde, John de Hessewelle, John Kerre, Alexander Fleckes, Adam de Aynesleye, John Borelle, John de Chattowe, William Corbet, Richard de Maxton, Thomas de Caverton, and Nicholas de Rothirford, who find that the barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire was formerly Sir William de Coucy's, late an enemy and rebel, and was thereby forfeited to the K. of England and France, and has been for eleven years past, and still is, in the K.'s hand. There are 4 carucates of arable land in the vill, each worth in time of peace 100*s.* 'silver,' and 20 bondages, each with a messuage and 20 acres arable and meadow, worth in peace time 20*s.*; 20 cottages, each worth formerly 2*s.* The water-mill of the barony was worth 20 marks. There used to be 4 breweries, each worth 13*s.* 4*d.* The barony at present is only worth 8*l.* in all issues, on account of the destruction of the country by the Scots. Sir William used to pay yearly to the castle-guard of Roxburgh 20*s.*, and do suit at the county. The barony of Prendrelath fell in the K.'s hands by forfeiture of George de Abernethy and Alicia his wife, late the K.'s enemies, and has been for eleven years and still is. There are 4 carucates of arable land in demesne, each worth in peace time 100*s.*, and 10 bondages, each with a messuage and 24 acres arable and meadow, worth formerly 20*s.*; 13 cottages used to pay 2*s.* each; a water-mill, once worth 100*s.*; and a brewery worth 6*s.* 8*d.*; 200 acres of wood and 300 (?) acres pasture, used to yield 20 marks. The barony is so utterly destroyed by the Scots that no profit can be levied at present for the K. It is held by service of a knight's fee to the K. [No seals.]

(Attached) a memorandum. The barony of Caverton is at present worth 8*l.* It was formerly worth 58*l.* The barony of Prendrelath is at present worth nothing, through the destruction of the country. It was worth 49*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* [Inq. p. m. 31 Edw. III., 2nd Nos. 55.]

David. Berwick-on-Tweed, ut supra. [Chapter House (Scots Docts.), Box 25, No. 9.]

Document much worn and faded. The seals of Edinburgh, Perth, Dundee, and Aberdeen, said to be appended, are only represented by a small fragment.

Oct. 6. Fœdera, iii. 378. 1662. Indenture at Berwick-on-Tweed, 6th October 1357, attesting that William bishop of St Andrews, Thomas bishop of Caithness, and Patrick bishop of Brechin, chancellor of Scotland, (and their respective chapters), proctors for the other bishops and chapters of Scotland, bind themselves under solemn oaths, to pronounce ecclesiastical censures against their K. and all others who shall infringe the treaty for his ransom. [Chapter House (Scots Docts.), Box 6, No. 1.]

Five seals only, appended by variously coloured silk strings, that of the chapter of Caithness lost. (1) Oval, dark red wax, red and white string [the Bishop of St Andrews, as in No. 1609]. (2) Large oval, broken, dark red wax, pale green strings. A church with nave and chancel, tall central and low western towers, round-headed doorway and windows. A St Andrew's cross, and cross patté over it, and interlaced trefoil below: 'SIGILLUM ECCLESIE SANCTI A[NDREE A]POSTOLI . . . .' (3) Oval, dark red wax, red strings [the Bishop of Caithness, as in No. 1657]. The dexter shield charged with 3 mullets, 2 and 1. (4) Oval, red wax, yellow strings. Beneath a richly decorated canopy, a representation of the Holy Trinity; in compartment below, a bishop kneeling in prayer: 'S PATRICII DEI GRACIA EPI BRECHINENSIS.' (5) Oval, dark red wax, blue strings, slightly chipped. The Father seated, holds the Son on the Cross with both hands; the Holy Ghost descending: 'S' CAPITULI . . . . [BRE]CHIN.'

Oct. 21. 1663. The K. orders the Bailiffs of Kirkele Rode to deliver three Scottish vessels laden with wool, &c., driven in there by stress of weather on the 19th, and arrested there, as a truce for 10 years has been concluded with the Scots. Westminster. [Close, 31 Edw. III. m. 9.]

[1357.] After Oct. 1664. William lord of Douglas complains to the K. of England and his Council, that on Saturday after the truce made at Berwick for the deliverance of the K. of Scotland, Sir Robert Tilliol (Tuylliyoll) with a great force from Cumberland and Westmorland, forayed his lands of Eskedale in open day, and robbed the poor people there of 1000 oxen, cows, and other young beasts, 1000 sheep and horses, and plunder (esprech') of houses to the value of 20*l.* And Sir

Edw. III. —— [1357.] Thomas de Lucy was an abettor of the raid, by laying ambush for the people who tried to rescue the goods under the truce. And he prays for redress, as neither he nor his people have done any harm to the K. or his subjects since the treaty of Berwick.

He also complains that since the truce at London between the K. of England's Council and the Scottish Ambassadors, the said Sir Robert and Sir Thomas, with the aid of the people of Cumberland and Westmorland, have again ravaged his lands in open day, with standards displayed, and ambuscades by Sir Thomas, of robbers at night, who are resetted in Lochmaben castle. They have also held many of his people to ransom, to their damage of 5000*l.* sterling. Notwithstanding these damages and wrongs, the petitioner has made no reprisals on Englishmen, except that these poor people who have been so plundered, have sometimes taken from Sir Thomas and Sir Robert's people chattels and other goods, for which he has often proffered redress and amends, to the end that Sir Thomas may do the like, and include Sir Robert; but he always refuses, saying he has neither will nor power.

William has also offered Robert 20*l.* sterling to hold the truce, but he refuses, not wishing to be at truce. Of which damages and wrongs the said William prays reason and redress, as he is always ready to do the same, for damages done by his own people, since the treaty of London. [No seal.] [Chapter House (B.), No. $\frac{2}{10}$.]

No date or place. On paper.

1357. Nov. 5. 1665. The K. signifies to his admirals and others that he has permitted Ralph de Stansfeld to ship 150 qrs. wheat and 150 qrs. of any other grain, from England or Ireland, for sale in Scotland. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 3, m. 17.]

Nov. 6. Fœdera, iii. 382. 1666. Ratification by David K. of Scots, with consent of the Council of his kingdom, of the treaty for his ransom. Scone. [Chapter House (Scots Docts.), Box 35, No. 8.]

In fine condition. The Great seal of Scotland, in white wax, appended by green silk twisted strings. Obv. the K. on horseback, close helmet crowned, sword in hand, galloping to sinister. The arms of Scotland on his shield and housings: 'S' DAVID DEI GRACIA REX SCOTTORUM.' Rev. the K. crowned, with long hair, seated on his throne, sceptre in right hand, left on his breast. His feet rest on two dragons (same inscription). The letter 'D' at left of his head.

Nov. 10. 1667. The K. for the good services of Henry de Staunden in defence of the castle of Berwick-on-Tweed, when the town was last taken by the Scots, and presently in the castle of Roxburgh, pardons him, at the request of Richard Tempest warden of Roxburgh, for breaking the late Archbishop of York's prison at Rypon, and freeing Robert de Seton and John de Manby therefrom. Westminster. [Patent, 31 Edw. III. p. 3, m. 8.]

EDW. III. —— 1357. Circa Dec. 1. 1668. Return by the escheator of Northumberland [under writ tested 1st December, 31 Edw. III.] that the late Cristiana mother of John Mautalent, an adherent of the Scots, held for her life a tenement of his heritage in Est Chyvington, which Gerard de Wodryngton holds, and he has taken it in the K.'s hand. [Chancery Files, Bundle No. 265.]

Dec. 18. 1669. Indenture whereby John de Coupland undertakes the keeping of Berwick-on-Tweed, from 24th April preceding, for a year, with a sufficient garrison, receiving 2000*l.* for all claims; having power, as one of the wardens of the March, to grant conducts and truces, and receive to peace, as he sees fit, and to repair the town walls, &c. at the K.'s cost. Westminster, 18th December 31st year. [Exchequer Treasury of Receipt Miscellanea, No. $\frac{46}{1}$.]

Small seal, red wax, on tag. Within oval compartment a shield couché, charged with a cross. Crest, on a barred helmet a goat's head: 'S' JOHIS DE COUPLAND.'

1357–58. Jan. 16. 1670. Inquisition [in virtue of writ tested Westminster, 18th November preceding] taken at [ ] before Richard Tempest sheriff of Rokesburgh, on Tuesday 16th January A.D. 1357, by Robert de Wodforthe, Roger de Alletone, John Kerre, John de Hescewelle, Richard Comyn, Gilbert Corbet, John de Chattowe, Alan de Molle, Thomas de Cavertone, Nicholas de Rotherforthe, Adam del .... rre, and David de Whittone, jurors, who say that Walter de Selby was seised in demesne as of fee of the barony of Prenderlathe, formerly William Whyssard's, in the county of Rokesburgh, by gift of Edward de Balliol, formerly K. of Scots, before that county was given to the K. of England, and held it till the Scots last took Rokesburgh castle; that it is held in capite, and worth in time of peace 100 marks, and at present nothing, because waste. That James de Selby is son and heir of Walter, and of full age. That the barony has been in the K.'s hand since Rokesburgh castle was regained, as the said James, at the time when his father Walter was slain by the Scots in the pele of Lydelle, was taken, and remained prisoner with them for 8 years and more, and could not sue his right. [Inq. ad quod damnum, 31 Edw. III. No. 6.]

[1357–58.] Jan. 18. 1671. Fiat for warrant to the Treasury officers to account with, Monsire William Trussell of Cubblesdon while in charge of Monsire David de Bruys the K.'s prisoner, allowing 10*s. per diem* for expenses, besides 20*l.* excess of expenses while he was in the Tower of London for 47 days. Item:—Allowing what he can shew on oath for clothes beds, and other necessaries bought for Monsire David. Item:—On oath, reasonable costs taking him from Odyham to London, thence to Canterbury, and from thence to Berwick; and for Monsire William and his company from Berwick to London. [No date.] [Chancery Files, Bundle No. 341.]

Edw. III. —— 1357–58. Jan. 18. 1672. The K. orders an accounting to be made in Exchequer with William Trussel of Cublesdon, late keeper of David de Bruys, allowing him 10*s.* a day for the prisoner's keep, and 20*l.* for 47 days while David was in the Tower, besides other expenses for David's clothing, beds, horses, &c., on his journey from Odyham by Canterbury to Berwick-on-Tweed, and Trussel's expenses with his retinue returning from Berwick to London, all as sworn by him. Westminster. [Close, 31 Edw. III. m. 3.]

III.—ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN SHERIFFS AND OTHER OFFICERS IN SCOTLAND; 1335–36.

Edw. III. 1335–36. Oct. 15–Sept. 29. Calendar, No. 1214.

Compotus diversorum vicecomitum et ballivorum in partibus Scocie, videlicet comitatus Berewici, villarum de Edenburgh, Hadynton, et Lithcu et comitatus de Edenburgh, ville et comitatus de Rokesburgh, ville et comitatus de Dounfres, necnon custumariorum magne custume apud Edenburgh Rokesburgh et Dounfres. [in dorso.]

Compotus Eustachii de Makeswelle vicecomitis de Dunfres de exitibus eiusdem comitatus a xv die Octobris anno Regis E[dwardi] Tercii post conquestum nono usque Festum Sancti Michaelis proximo sequentem.

Idem reddit compotum de vj ℔. receptis de termino sancti Michaelis anno ix° de warda castri de Dunfres et non plus eo quod idem vicecomes nichil poterit inde levare de baronia de Stapelgorton que solebat reddere xx ß. per annum ad eandem wardam, neque de baronia de Mallaynok que solebat reddere per annum xx ß. ad dictam wardam. Et de xl ß. receptis de alba firma baronie de Carlaverok ad terminos Sancti Martini et Pentecostes et non plus, eo quod Rex per cartam suam perdonavit Eustachio de Makeswelle tenenti baronie predicte, xx ℔. per annum quas reddi solebant de firma predicta, videlicet iiij die Decembris anno octavo. Et de xij ß. receptis de consimili firma de terra de Barrendonan ad eosdem terminos. Et de x ß. de consimili firma de terra de Alayn-ton ad eosdem terminos. Et de xij ð. de eadem firma de Alisland ad eosdem terminos. Et de vj ß. viij ð. de eadem firma de Mossegate ad eosdem terminos. Et de iiij ß receptis de eadem firma de medietate terre de Kelton que est Roberti de Kirkonwel, ad eosdem terminos. Et de iiij ß. de eadem firma debitis de altera medietate eiusdem terre de Kelton, que est in manu Willelmi de Duresme ex dono Regis Scocie, non respondet, quia medietas illa iacuit vacua et nulla districcio inveniri potuit in eadem. De exitibus terre de Keldwode cum pertinentiis non respondet, quia Rex xv die Octobris anno ix° eam dedit et concessit prefato Eustachio habendam et tenendam sibi et heredibus suis, reddendo Regi unum espervarium sorum per annum, per breve Regis. De exitibus terre de Bourland cum pertinentiis non respondet, quia Rex dicto xv die Octobris eam dedit Ricardo de Colnhath habendam sibi et heredibus suis, reddendo Regi unum espervarium sorum per annum, per breve Regis. De exitibus ville de Kirkudbright in Galwithia a dicto xv die Octobris anno ix° usque viij diem Novembris proximo sequentem, quo die Rex eam concessit Johanni Mareschal habendam et tenendam sibi et heredibus suis, quousque idem Rex sibi providerit alibi infra regnum Scocie de xx marcis terre habendam sibi et heredibus suis per breve,

EDW. III. 1335–36. non respondet quia dicta villa fuit vasta per tempus huius compoti. —— De mota castri et quibusdam terris dominicis vocatis Kyngesholm apud Dunfres que solebant valere per annum lx ŝ., non respondet ex causa predicta.

Summa tocius ix lĭ. xiij ŝ. viij đ.

Nove escaete:—De baronia de Dalswynton que fuit David comitis Athollie, ab ultimo die Novembris anno ix° quo die idem comes obiit, usque xix diem Marcii proximo sequentem, quo die Rex commisit custodiam baronie predicte Alexandro de Moubray pro xx marcis per annum, solvendis ad terminos Pentecostes et Sancti Martini per manus suas proprias ad scaccarium Berewici, non respondet, quia nulli fuerunt exitus per idem tempus. Et de c ŝ. receptis de eadem baronia ad terminum Pentecostes. Et de ij ŝ. receptis de exitibus cuiusdam terre vocate Aghencarn que fuit Willelmi le Blount, remanentis in manu Regis nomine custodie per tempus huius compoti, et non plus ex causa predicta. Et de xiij ŝ. iiij đ. de terra de Benneueryk que fuit episcopi Glasguensis que solebat valere xx marcis et que est in manu Regis racione vacacionis eiusdem episcopatus, videlicet pro termino Pentecostes proximo preterito. Et de v ŝ. de firma de Alisland que fuit Johannis de Felton, remanente in manu Regis nomine custodie, et non plus ex causa predicta. Et de iij ŝ. iiij đ. receptis de exitibus terre que fuit Willelmi Belle que solebat valere xl ŝ. per annum remanente in manu Regis occasione forisfacture predicte Willelmi. Et de xij đ. de exitibus viij acrarum terre in Torthorald que fuerunt Johannis Belle, remanentium in manu Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem Johannis. Et de xl ŝ. receptis de exitibus baronie de Doresdere que fuit Cristiane de Gynes remanentis in manu Regis post mortem predicte Cristiane, eo quod heres eiusdem non est ius suum inde prosecuturus.

Summa istius viij lĭ. iiij ŝ. viij đ.

De placitis et perquisitis comitatus ibidem non respondet, quia nichil potuit inde levari per tempus huius compoti ut dicit.

De medietate baronie de Sennewhare que fuit Willelmi de Creghton, remanente in manu Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem Willelmi, que solebat valere tempore pacis c marcarum, non respondet,quia fuit vasta per tempus huius compoti. De quinque burgagiis in eadem villa que fuerunt Thome filii Thome Dikeson, que solebant valere tempore pacis xvj ŝ. viij đ., remanentibus in manu Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem Thome, non respondet ex causa predicta. De duabus carucatis terre infra baroniam de Amesfeld que fuerunt Johannis de Dunbretane, in manu [Regis] per forisfacturam eiusdem Johannis, que solebant valere xlŝ. non [respondet] ex causa predicta. De baronia de Kirkmichel que fuit Philippi de Moubray defuncti qui eam tenuit in capite de Rege Scocie, reddendo ad wardam castri de Dunfres x ŝ. per annum, et que solebat valere per annum c marcarum, a primo die

EDW. III. Marcii anno x°, quo die baronia illa capta fuit in manum Regis
—— quousque ius eiusdem baronie inter Ancelmum de Gyses, qui unam 1335–36. sororum et heredum Johannis filii et heredis predicti Philippi duxit in uxorem, Robertum Gower, qui aliam sororem et heredem eiusdem Johannis, et David Mareschal, qui terciam sororem et heredem eiusdem Johannis, duxerunt in uxores, et Alexandrum de Moubray, discuciatur, usque festum Sancti Michaelis proximo sequentem, non respondet quia vasta. De baronia de Tynwald que fuit Petri de Middilton defuncti qui de Rege tennit in capite per servicium reddendi x ß. ad wardam castri Regis de Dunfres, et solebat valere per annum xx ℔., a xx die Octobris usque festum Sancti Michaelis proximo sequentem, et remanente in manu Regis per minorem etatem heredis eiusdem Petri, non respondet ex causa predicta. De quadam terra in Kirkandres Pozton que fuit Willelmi de Gardino et que solebat valere per annum viij ℔. remanente in manu Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem, non respondet ex causa predicta. De terra de Glenkarn que fuit Patricii comitis, remanente in manu Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem comitis, et que solebat valere xlvj marcarum, non respondet ex causa predicta.

Summa tocius recepti xvij ℔. xviij ß. iiij d.

Et in vadiis unius hominis custodientis prisones ibidem, capientis i d. per diem per tempus huius compoti, videlicet per cccl dies, xxix ß. ij d. Et sic debet xvj ℔. ix ß. ij d., quos solvit et quietus est. [m. 1.]

COMPOTUS GERVASII AVENEL ET WILLELMI MALKYNSON, JOHANNIS SMERLES, ET JOHANNIS LE LANG, BALLIVORUM BURGI DE DUNFRES, A DICTO XV DIE OCTOBRIS USQUE FESTUM SANCTI MICHAELIS PROXIMO SEQUENTEM.

Idem reddunt compotum de firma ville de Dounfres de terminis Sancti Martini et Pentecostes ultimo preteritis, de ix ℔. xvij ß. viij d. Et de ij ß. exeuntibus de burgagio Willelmi Malkynson in eodem burgo, existentibus in manu Regis per forisfacturam Johannis filii Laghlan et Johannis Mounville per tempus predictum. De xvj denariis annui redditus exeuntibus de quodam tenemento Willelmi Malkynson in villa predicta, remanente in manu Regis per forisfacturam Gilberti de la Haye, et viij d. redditus exeuntis de tenemento Gilberti le Smyth in eadem villa, remanente in manu Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem Gilberti, non respondent, quia dicta duo tenementa jacent vasta per tempus huius compoti. De j tenemento in eodem burgo remanente in manu Regis per forisfacturam comitis Patricii, non respondent, quia dictum tenementum fuit vastum per tempus huius compoti.

Summa tocius recepte, x ℔. xij d., quos solverunt super compotum suum et quieti sunt.

Edw. III. — 1335–36. Oct. 15–Sept. 29.

Compotus Roberti de Tughale vicecomitis de Berewico super Twedam a xv^mo^ die Octobris anno regni Regis E[dwardi] Tercii post conquestum nono usque [festum] Sancti Michaelis proximo sequentem de exitibus eiusdem comitatus.

De xxx li. redditus quas comes Marchie solebat reddere ad wardam castri de Berewico super Twedam, non respondet, quia terre et tenementa que fuerunt eiusdem comitis devenerunt ad manum Regis per forisfacturam eiusdem, et quod pars earundem terrarum et tenementorum est in manu Regis ex causa predicta, et residuum earundem terrarum et tenementorum est in manibus diversorum, videlicet Thome de Bradstan, Mauricii de Berkeley, Radulphi de Neville, Antonii de Lucy, et aliorum. Et de xl s. receptis de baronia de Upsethlyngton ad eandem wardam. De xl s. redditus debitis ad wardam predictam de baronia de Hilton, non respondet, ad presens, eo quod baronia illa est vasta et nichil potuit inde levari per tempus huius compoti. De xl s. redditus debitis ad eandem wardam de baronia de Langeton quam Radulphus de Neville tenet de dono Regis Scocie, non respondet, quia Rex xxvj die Januarii anno x° per breve de privato sigillo suo perdonavit eidem Radulpho xj li. x s. Regi debitos ad wardam castri Berewici de anno x° pro terris et tenementis suis in comitatu Berewici. Et de xxvj s. viij d. receptis de duabus partibus baronie de Sempring ad eandem wardam, et non plus, eo quod tercia pars eiusdem baronie est in manu Regis, videlicet due partes eiusdem tercie partis racione minoris etatis heredis Roberti de Caldecotes, et tercia pars eiusdem tercie partis per forisfacturam Roberti de Thomaston. Et de xl s. receptis de baronia de Foulden ad eandem wardam. Et de lx s. receptis de baronia de Bonkhill ad wardam predictam. De xl s. provenientibus de baronia de Morthington ad wardam predictam a predicto xv° die Octobris usque xxvj diem Novembris proximo sequentem, quo die Rex concessit Johanni de Denum ad terminum vite sue eosdem xl s. per breve Regis, non respondet quia nullus terminus solucionis eiusdem redditus accidit infra idem tempus.

CORRIGENDA ET ADDENDA.

Page 18, paragraph 95. This document belongs to the year 1310, and should follow No. 151. The original has been lately identified among the Royal letters, Chapter House. The true date is 16th June 'lan de nostre regne tierz,' i.e. 1310. This later year, however, strengthens the argument (Introduction, p. xiv) that the Scottish King's second expedition to Argyll, and final overthrow of John of Lorne, took place in 1309, as it leaves a longer space of time for the capture of the castle to which that chief betook himself, after his father's temporary submission.

„ 23, line 25, for Ascheman, read Asehennan (?).

„ 46, paragraph 244, last line, insert 5 before Edw. II.

„ 64, „ 336 should probably follow No. 226, i.e. in 1311.
